DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS, TO WIT:

District Clerk's Office.

BE IT REMEMBERED, that on the twenty-eighth day of July, A. D. 1817, and in the forty second year of the independence of the United States of America, J. E. WORCESTER, of the said district, has deposited in this office the title of a book, the right whereof he claims as author, in the words following, to wit:—A Geographical Dictionary, or Universal Gazetteer; ancient and modern. In two volumes. By J. E. Worcester, A. M. In conformity to the act of the congress of the United States, entitled, "An act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the author and proprietor of such copies, during the times therein mentioned;" and also to an act, entitled, "An act supplementary to an act, entitled, An act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies during the times therein mentioned; and extending the benefits thereof to the arts of designing, engraving and etching historical and other prints."

JNO. W. DAVIS, Clerk of the District of Massachusetts.

PREFACE

TO THE SECOND EDITION.

AT the time when the first edition of this Gazetteer was prepared, the author was not in possession of such materials as enabled him to execute it in a manner satisfactory to himself. It was, however, received with a greater degree of indulgence than he was authorized to expect. Since that time his attention has been directed towards its improvement, and the state in which it now appears, will, as he hopes, be found less unworthy of the public approbation. Having possessed himself of various sources of information, he has gone through a laborious revision of the whole, has written anew almost all the principal articles, and given to the work a more regular and systematic form. A great mass of new and important matter has been incorporated, careful attention has been paid to the present political divisions of the globe, and the population and statistics of the different parts have been given from the most recent and authentic sources. The object has been to collect a complete body of geographical and statistical knowledge, and to digest it in the most concise and convenient form. The quantity of matter comprised in the present edition, is much greater than in proportion to the increased size of the book. This has been effected in part by using a type a little smaller than the one on which the first edition was printed, and in part by improving upon the plan of condensation, and excluding every thing superfluous. Much information is given in a tabular form in the body of the work, as well as in the Appendix at the end.

Care has been taken to render the work useful to different descriptions of persons, the merchant, the scholar, and the general reader. Particular attention has been bestowed on the commercial products and resources of different countries, the political condition, state of society, and religion; also upon literary institutions, missionary stations, and objects of interesting inquiry and curiosity, both natural and artificial.

It would be unnecessary, if it were possible, to specify all the sources from which information has been derived. It may not, however, be improper to mention some of the principal ones. The two works of similar design, which have contributed chiefly to the improvement of this, are the Edinburgh Gazetteer, completed in 1822, and Hassel's "Geographisch-statistisches Handwörterbuch," published at Weimar in 1817. Both of these are very valuable works, abounding in recent geographical and statistical information. The geography of the United States has been improved by the use of various recent publications and documents, and particularly by an extensive correspondence with the different parts of the country. The late census has been incorporated; and in cases in which the population is stated without date, it is to be understood as given according to the census of 1820. Among the sources from which information has been derived respecting South America, are the publications of Bonycastle, Mawe, and Brackenridge, and the documents furnished to the government of the United States by the commissioners of 1817. In giving the statistics of Sweden and Norway, use has been made of Djurberg's Geographical Dictionary of Scandinavia, published in Stockholm, in 1818, and of Hagelstam's Geographical and Statistical map of Sweden and Norway, published in 1820. Among the works made use of with regard to France, is the geography of that country by Mentelle, published in Paris in 1821. From Picot's Statistics of Switzerland, published at Geneva, in 1819, information has been derived respecting that country. In improving the notices of the articles pertaining to Great Britain, the Edinburgh Gazetteer has furnished the principal materials; it has also been of great use with regard to the rest of Europe, and the other parts of the globe. The works of Hassel, Liechtenstern, and Cannabich have furnished much information respecting Europe, and particularly Germany. Hassel and also Malte-Brun have been of much use with regard to other parts. In addition to the works above enumerated, recourse has been had to books of travels and various other sources. In cases in which the information is doubtful, or the statements differ, the authorities relied upon are frequently given.

Ancient and sacred geography have been attended to with care, though they are treated of in a very concise manner. With regard to ancient geography, the learned D'Anville has been followed as the principal guide, though various other authorities have been consulted. It is well known that in many instances it is impossible to determine with certainty what ancient names correspond to the modern. But the conciseness of the plan has precluded discussion in such cases. The result, therefore, of the inquiries of learned men has been adopted, without specifying the uncertainties with which it is attended, or the reasons upon which it is founded.

A work of this kind must necessarily be defective, even if the best possible use were made of all the materials extant. But in a design embracing such a variety and multiplicity of detail, there will be many errors and defects, that must be attributed to inadvertance. The author is aware that this Gazetteer admits of great improvement. Imperfect, however, as it is, it has cost him no small labour; and it has been his endeavour to render it useful and acceptable to the public. He has abundant reason to be satisfied with the manner in which it has heretofore been received, and he cherishes the hope, that in its present state, it will be found to carry with it such marks of his industry and fidelity, as will secure to him a continuance of the public favour.

EXPLANATIONS.

1. The longitude is reckoned from Greenwich, in England.
2. Distances are always expressed in miles, except when mentioned otherwise, and after figures expressing distance, miles is understood. In the United States and Great Britain, the miles made use of are statute miles, $69\frac{1}{2}$ to a degree.

3. In this work the Capes are enumerated in a body together, in alphabetical order, under the letter C.; as Cape Horn. The names beginning with St. will be also found together, in alphabetical order, under the letter S.

4. Many words begin sometimes with C and sometimes with K, and when not found under the one letter, may be sought for under the other. The same may be observed with regard to words beginning with Sch or Sh; Tch, Tsch, Cs or Cz.

5. The distances of all the post towns in the United States, from the city of Washington, are expressed by W. followed by the figures denoting the number of miles. For example, under the article Boston, W. 436 denotes that Boston is 436 miles from the city of Washington, by the course in which the mail is carried. These distances are given according to the official statement from the General Post Office, and it may be observed that the mail is not uniformly carried from the city of Washington by the nearest distance that may be travelled.

6. The abbreviation t. as it respects this country, is used for town or township. In the Northern States every county is divided into townships, generally from 4 to 6 miles square. These townships are incorporated with certain rights and privileges, and are usually called towns. They are often divided into parishes, which is an ecclesiastical division. In New England the principal village almost always takes the name of the township in which it is situated. In the state of New York villages have frequently an incorporation distinct from that of the township in which they are found, sometimes taking the same name, and sometimes a different one. In the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana, the towns or villages commonly take different names from the townships in which they are situated.

7. In the states south of Pennsylvania and the river Ohio, no such subdivision, as that of townships, is in use. In these states a town does not necessarily denote an incorporated district; but any collection of houses, few or many, is denominated a town. In the Southern States post offices are frequently designated by local names, when there are not more than two or three houses, and sometimes only a single house. These are usually designated in this work by the abbreviation p-v.

Aberdalgy, v. Scot., in Perth; 4 S. Perth. Pop. 513. In the church-yard is a monument of black marble raised for William Oliphant.

Aberdeen, shire, or co. Scot., bounded N. and E. by the German ocean, S. by the counties of Perth, Forfar, and Kincardine, and W. by those of Bamf, Elgin, and Inverness. It was formerly divided into the districts of Marr, Tormartin, and Buchan. It is now divided in 8 districts, and 87 parishes. It contains one city, Old Aberdeen, 3 royal boroughs, New Aberbeen, Kintore, and Inverary, and the towns of Peterhead, Fraserburgh, Huntly, Kesh, Old Meldrum, &c. It is 85 miles long from E. to W., and 40 from N. to S. Sq. m. 1,986. Pop. 135,075. Families 33,718, of which 13,637 are engaged in agriculture, and 14,286 in trade and manufactures. The rivers are the Dee, Don, Ythan, Ugie, Ury, Deveron, &c. There are numerous small lakes. The southern and western parts are mountainous, and not so well peopled as the eastern. Much of the country is covered with wood. Agriculture has made considerable advances, and more cattle are said to be raised in this county, than in any other in Scotland.

Aberdeen, royal borough, shiretown and s-p. Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, on rising ground between the Don and the Dee, at their efflux into the German ocean; 108 NNE. Edinburgh, 504 NNW. London. Lon. 2. 8. W. Lat. 57. 9. N. Pop. in 1811, 21,629. It is the principal city in the north of Scotland, and has a safe and spacious harbour, created at great expense, but it has a bar at its mouth, which prevents the entrance of large vessels. A pier was erected in 1780, extending 1,200 feet; and by an act obtained in 1810, it has been extended 900 feet further. The town has of late years received various improvements both in the addition of streets, and in the style of building; and many of its houses display the taste of its inhabitants. It contains 21 houses of public worship, 7 for the established church, 4 for Seceders, 4 for Baptists &c., 3 for Episcopalians, 1 for Methodists, 1 for Roman Catholics, and 1 for Quakers, and has various charitable institutions. Trade and manufactures are carried on to a large extent. The latter consist chiefly of linen, woollen, and cotton. About 150 vessels belong to the port, carrying 17,131 tons, engaged in the whale fishery, foreign and coasting trade.—Natives, Barber, Jamison, Cruden, G. Campbell, Duncan, and Fordyce.

A university, called Marischal College, was founded here in 1593, endowed by George earl of Marischal, and has cherished a number of distinguished scholars. The buildings have been erected at different periods, and cover a considerable area, but are very irregular. The university has a principal, 10 professors, a library of upwards of 10,000 vols., and an observatory. The number of students in the winter session of 1816—17, was 212, besides 105 alternately attending here and at King's College. Marischal and King's Colleges, though entirely distinct, are considered as forming one university.

Aberdeen, Old, (an. Devana,) city, Scot., in Aberdeenshire, on the Don, 1 mile from its mouth, and 1 mile north of the new town of Aberdeen. Pop. 1,911. It is often included under the same name and description with New Aberdeen, though it is an entirely distinct corporation. It is an old, poor town, with a fine bridge across the Don, and contains 3 hospitals and a university, called King's College, founded in 1506, which has a good library of 12,935 volumes, and a principal, sub-principal, (who is a regent), 3 other regents, and 9 professors. The number of students in the winter session of 1816—17, was 187.

Abernethy, (an. Victoria,) t. Scot., in Perthshire, situated at the junction of the Ern and the Tay; 4 SE. Perth. Pop. 1,635. It was once the capital of the Picts; and the see of a bishop metropolitan of Scotland, which continued till the year 840, when it was by Kenneth III. transferred to St. Andrew's.

Here was a convent of Culdees, changed, in 1272, to a priory of canons regular. This place is most remarkable for having one of those tall slender conical towers, 74 feet high, and 16 in diameter, of which there is only one more in Scotland, (that is at Brechin,) although they abound in Ireland; but their date, and the use for which they were constructed, remain still doubtful, notwithstanding the researches of antiquaries.

Aberystwith, s-p. S. Wales, in Cardigan-shire; 96 W. Worcester, 208 W. London. Lon. 4. 20. W. Lat. 52. 23. N. Pop. 2,264. It is situated on an easy eminence near the sea, at the mouths of two rivers, Ystwith and Ryddol; but the bar of the haven being seldom passable for large vessels, it is not a place of great trade. There are some accommodations, and the declivity being easy and regular on a sandy bottom, is convenient for bathing, for which it is much resorted to by invalids, who have the benefit of a chalybeate spring and hot and cold baths. The trade of the place is carried on by 210 vessels belonging to the port, carrying 8,120 tons.

Abukir, or Aboukir, called by Europeans Bikiere, or Biker, (an. Canopus,) t. Egypt, on the coast of the Mediterranean; 10 NE. Alexandria. Lon. 30. 38. E. Lat. 31. 19. N. The situation is on a point of land on W. side of a bay, at the mouth of what the ancients call the Canopic branch of the Nile, but which is now straitened, and almost choaked with sand. Abukir contains but few inhabitants.—Off this place a battle was fought on the first of August, 1798, between the English fleet under Admiral Nelson, and the French fleet under Admiral Brueys.—About two miles from Abukir are the ruins of a town close to the sea, and part of them under water, considered as the Taposiris Parva of ancient Egypt.

Abydos, now Nagara and Madfune, see Sestos and Dardanelles.

Abyla, mt. Africa, opposite Calpe in Spain, 18 m. distant. These two mountains were called by the ancients the Pillars of Hercules, and are on the Straits of Gibraltar.

ABYSSINIA, called also Upper Ethiopia and Habesch, country, Africa, between Lon. 33. and 44. E. Lat. 7. and 16. N.; bounded N. by Sennaar, E. by the Red Sea, S. by Adel and unknown regions, and W. by Sennaar, Kordofan, and unknown regions.

Extent. The extent is not well defined, but is estimated at about 800 miles in length, and 600 in breadth. Sq. m. about 450,000.

Divisions. It is formed into the 3 following great divisions, which have latterly been under separate governments, viz.

1. Tigre, comprehending the tract between the Red Sea and the Tacazze. Principal districts, Tigre proper, Agame, Andeste, Wojjerat, Wofila, Lasta, Avergale, Samen, Zemben, Sire, and the country of the Baharnegash. Chief towns, Adowa, Antalio, Dixan, Axum, Sire, Masuah, Arkiko, and Chelicut.

2. Amhara, comprehending the provinces west of the Tacazze; the principal are Amhara proper, Dembea, Damut, Gojam, and Begember. Towns, Gondar, the capital, and Emfras.

3. The southern provinces of Shoa and Efat, and other districts. Towns, Ankober and Tegulet.

Rivers. The principal are the Bahr el Azrek, or Abyssinian Nile, Tacazze, Coror, Dender, Maleg, Kazano, and Hawash. The principal lake is Dembea.

Face of the country and mountains. Abyssinia is a country of mountains, intersected by deep and extensive valleys. A lofty range, called Lamalmon, bars the entrance from the Red Sea. The mountains of Samen between the Tacazze and the Coror, are still more elevated. To these may be added the mountains of Gojam, Efat, and Amid-Amid, supposed to be a branch of the mountains of the Moon. The height of some of the summits has been estimated, but with doubtful accuracy.

Soil. The country in general is extremely fertile, and productive where it can be cultivated; and is in a great measure exempted from that empire of sand which dooms so large a portion of Africa to sterility.

Climate. Though situated within the torrid zone, Abyssinia is generally temperate and healthy, but varies with the surface and aspect of the country. In the high and mountainous regions, the inhabitants enjoy a cool and salubrious atmosphere, and a serene sky; while those in the valleys or in the vicinity of marshes or sandy deserts, languish under excessive heat or a moist and suffocating air. The seasons are divided into wet and dry. The rainy season continues from April to Sept.

Productions. Wheat in considerable quantities; teff, a kind of very small grain, very productive, and affording bread in universal use; tocusso, a plant affording a kind of black bread for the lower classes; ansete, a plant used as a substitute for grain; honey in abundance; papyrus, balsam, myrrh, and opocalsum. Salt is an important natural production, found in great quantities on a plain between Masuah and Amphila.

Animals. Abyssinia produces a great variety of quadrupeds, both wild and tame; of the latter, the principal are of the cow kind, and sheep; the wild sort are the gazel or antelope, jackal, wild-hog, elephant, rhinoceros, giraffa, or cameleopard, lion, leopard, hyena, bohur, fassa, seeho, madequa, &c.; the crocodile and hippopotamus are found in all the large rivers. The feathered creation bears more than its usual proportion to the other species, and there is also a vast profusion of insects.

Commerce. Foreign commerce is carried on entirely by the way of Masuah. The exports consist of gold, ivory, and slaves; the imports chiefly of lead, block-tin, gold foil, Persian carpets, raw silk, broadcloths, coloured skins, glass beads, and decanters.

Manufactures. Manufactures are in a low state. Such articles, however, as are conceived most essential, are fabricated; as cotton cloths, arms, and instruments of iron.

Government. The government is despotic, and the political condition of the country exceedingly disorderly and turbulent. The Galla, a savage people, are now in possession of Gondar and the districts included under Amhara.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants are in a very low state of civilization, and many of their customs are exceedingly barbarous and brutal. Human life seems but little more respected than that of brutes. Marriage is a slight connexion, formed and dissolved at pleasure.—The houses are mere hovels, of a conical form with thatched roofs; but in their churches, which are numerous, they attempt some display of architecture.

Population. The population has been variously estimated from 1, to 4,000,000. No data, however, exist on which one can scarcely form even a conjecture with regard to the amount. Mr. Salt, a late English traveller, could obtain no accurate information on the subject. His impression, however, was, that the country was populous, though by no means in the same degree as England.

Religion. The Abyssinians profess Christianity, yet retain a large tincture of judaical observances. They are said to be a branch of the Copts or Jacobites, also called Eutychiens or Monophysites. The metropolitan of the Abyssinian church is styled Abuna, and is appointed by the patriarch of Alexandria, residing at Cairo. The religion consists of a motley collection of traditions, tenets, and ceremonies, derived from the Jewish and Christian churches, unworthily dignified with the name of Christianity. The rites of Moses are observed; both sexes undergo circumcision; Saturday and Sunday are both held sacred as Sabbaths; their festivals and saints are innumerable.

History. The Abyssinians boast that their country is the Sheba of Scripture, and assert that it was converted to Judaism several centuries before the Christian era. It is much more certain that it was converted to Christianity before the middle of the 4th century. It remained, however, almost unknown to Europeans till the era of modern naval discovery, at which time a report reached Europe, that a Christian sovereign, to whom was assigned the fantastic appellation of Prete Janni, or Prester John, ruled a vast empire in the centre and east of Africa. This touched at once the spirit of discovery and religious zeal of the age; and after the discovery of Abyssinia, a country governed by a monarch professing Christianity, the above title was affixed by Europeans to its emperor.

Abzal, r. Persia, which runs through the province of Couhestan, passing by Tostar, &c.

into the Persian gulf. Saphor, king of Persia, caused an aqueduct to be built on this river, to supply the inhabitants of Tostar with water.

Acapulco, s-p. Mexico, on the Pacific Ocean; 240 S. Mexico. Lon. 98. 50. W. Lat. 16. 50. N. Pop. 4,000, mostly people of colour. At the time of the arrival of the Manilla galleon the population is increased to 9,000, by the resort of strangers. It has an excellent bay, and the best harbour on the W. coast of Spanish America, and one of the most admirable basins in the world, free, safe and open for vessels of any burthen. A large ship sails every year from this port to Manilla, the principal of the Phillippine Islands, carrying cochineal, quicksilver, cocoa, but chiefly silver; and returning loaded with spices, muslins, china, silk, and other products and manufactures of Asia. Acapulco was formerly very populous, but it is now only a miserable little town, which however is dignified with the name of a city, and being surrounded with a volcanic mountain, the atmosphere is constantly thick and unwholesome. The inhabitants are almost entirely African.

Acara, t. Buenos Ayres, in La Paz, on W. side of lake Titicaca; 10 S. Chucuito.

Acaraga, r. S. America, which joins the Uruguay, at the town of Assumption.

Achates, now Drillo.

Acheen, Atcheen, or Achem, km., in N. part of Sumatra, of a triangular form, and containing about 26,000 square miles. It is sheltered by a range of hills that runs from a promontory to the SE. and another which inclines to the ENE.; the lands between are fertile, and the best cultivated in the island.

The Achinese are in general taller, stouter, and darker coloured than the other people of the island; more active and industrious, have more general knowledge, and deal as merchants in a more extensive and liberal manner. In religion they are Mahometans, and have many mosques and priests. They are expert and bold sailors, and employ a multitude of vessels in trade and fishing, of various sorts and sizes. The government is absolute, and the monarchy, hereditary.

Acheen, city, Asia, and capital of a kingdom in N. part of Sumatra, on a river which runs into the sea, near NW. point of the island, called Acheen-Head. Lon. 95. 46. E. Lat. 5. 22. N. Pop. about 36,000. H. 8,000. It is described as exceedingly populous, containing about 8,000 houses, built of bamboos, and rough timber, standing distinct from each other, and raised on piles some feet from the ground, to guard against the effects of inundations. The river is not large, and in the dry monsoon will hardly admit the navigation of a boat. It was formerly a celebrated mart of eastern commodities; but the chief trade is now carried to Hindoostan, from whence it receives cotton goods in return for gold dust, sapan-wood, betel-nut, patch-leaf, or costus Indicus, pepper, sulphur, camphor, and benzoin: by European vessels, the inhabitants receive opium, iron, and some other articles.

Acre, or St. John d' Acre, (an. Acco, Acca, Ake, Accoby, and Ptolemais,) city and s-p. Palestine, capital of the pachalic of Acre, sometimes called the pachalic of Said; 24 S. Tyre, 55 N. Jerusalem. Lon. 35. 26. E. Lat. 32. 40. N. Pop. in 1760, according to Mariti, 15,000; in 1797, according to Browne, 18 or 20,000; in 1820, according to the English consul, 10,000. Greek abp. see. It is situated at N. angle of a bay, which extends in a semicircle of 9 miles as far as the point of Mount Carmel, near the mouth of the Shardanah. The harbour, though bad, is one of the best on the coast, and the possession of it is of great importance, it being the sole avenue by which rice, the staple food of the country is introduced. The chief import is rice; export, cotton.

The town has been celebrated from remote antiquity, and is surrounded with walls, but is greatly reduced from its former extent. The streets are so narrow that when a camel passes them, no other animal can pass at the same time. The houses are built of cut stone, with flat roofs and terraces. It has a castle, 6 mosques, 1 Greek church, 1 Armenian church, 1 catholic convent, a synagogue, and 2 bazars. It is rendered unhealthy by its construction, and by the neighbouring marshes. The surrounding country is fertile.—Pop. of the pachalic 420,000, of whom 300,000 are Turks; the rest chiefly Christians.

In 1191, Acre was besieged by the Crusaders, and in the seige 300,000 are said to have been slain. In 1799, the French, under Bonaparte, laid seige to this place; but the Turks under Djezzar, being assisted by a small number of English under Sir Sidney Smith, the French were repulsed with great loss and compelled to retreat.

AFRICA, one of the four great quarters of the world, the third in extent and probably in population. It forms a peninsula, connected with Asia only by the isthmus of Suez.

Boundaries. It is bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, S. by the Southern or Pacific Ocean, and W. by the Atlantic.

Extent. It lies between Lon. 18. W. and 51. E.; Lat. 37. N. and 35. S.; about 4,980 English miles in length, and 4,500, where widest, in breadth. Sq. m. according to Malte-Brun, 12,952,000; according to Hassel, 11,270,000; according to Graberg, 11,063,000.

Population. The population of Africa is much less in proportion to its extent than that of Asia or Europe, but no data exist by which its amount can be computed. It has been variously estimated from 30, to 150,000,000. Malte-Brun estimates it at 70,000,000; Graberg at 99,000,000; Hassel, from 100, to 110,000,000.

Divisions. Africa may be comprised under the 6 following divisions:

1. Northern Africa, comprehending Egypt and the Barbary States. These are Barca, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, Fez, Morocco, and Biledulgerid.

2. Western Africa. This comprises a vast extent of coast, including the countries between Sahara and Benguela; viz. the countries on the Senegal and Gambia; the Ivory, Gold, and Slave coasts of Guinea: Benin, Loango, Congo, and Angola.

3. Southern Africa, extending from the Cape of Good Hope to the frontier of Benguela and Mozambique. This division is styled Caffra, and is inhabited by the Caffres, Hottentots, Boshuanas, &c.

4. Eastern Africa. The counties in this division are Abyssinia and Nubia, and various countries, but little known, lying on the eastern coast between Mozambique and the straits of Babelmandel.

5. Central Africa. This vast division, the greater part of which is wholly unexplored, is, however, known to contain some fertile and populous countries. Some of the principal kingdoms are Darfur, Bornou, Fezzan, Kassina, Houssa, Tombuctoo, Wangara, Bambarra, Ludamar, Bondou, and Bambouk.

6. African Islands. The principal of these on the western coast are the Azores, Madeira, and Cape Verd Islands, belonging to Portugal; the Canaries, belonging to Spain: and St.

Helena, belonging to Great Britain. On the eastern coast are Madagascar, Bourbon, Mauritius, the Comoro islands, and Socotra.

Natural Features. Africa is distinguished from each of the other quarters of the globe by its immense arid deserts, devoted to perpetual desolation; by the fewness of its rivers, and by its want of inland seas.

Rivers. The Nile and the Niger are two of the most celebrated rivers in the world. The other most considerable rivers are the Senegal, Gambia, Zaire or Congo, Zambese or Cuama, Quilimancy, and Orange river.

Lakes. The largest lakes that are known, are Maravi, Soudan, and Dembea.

Mountains. The principal ranges of mountains are the Atlas, Kong, Crystal mountains, Mountains of the Moon; Mountains of Samen, Geesh, Amid-Amid, Lamalmon and others of Abyssinia, Mountains of Lupata, and Niewveldt mountains.

Soil. The soil, when well watered, is exceedingly luxuriant; but in many parts it is dry and barren, and in high winds the inhabitants are liable to be overwhelmed and suffocated with showers of scorching sand.

Climate. The greater is situated within the torrid zone, and the heat is intense, and almost insupportable to Europeans.

Productions. The productions are sugar, salt, gold-dust, ivory, sandal-wood, various kinds of fruits, drugs, gums, pearls, and the common necessities of life.

Animals. Africa is remarkable for its multitude of wild animals. Lions and elephants are numerous; also leopards, panthers, tigers, hyenas, rhinoceroses, giraffas, antelopes, zebras, horses, camels, dromedaries, monkeys, civet-cats, crocodiles, hippopotami, serpents of various descriptions, and a great variety of the feathered creation.

Commerce. The articles of commerce most extensively obtained from Africa, are gold, ivory, and above all slaves. The article in most demand in the central parts, is salt.

Inhabitants. Africa is by far the least civilized quarter of the globe. The natives are composed of numerous tribes, but the two classes, which divide the most extensive portion are the Moors and Negroes. The Moors are chiefly found north of the Senegal and Niger, and are Mahometans. They are of a tawny, sun-burnt complexion, and their character is usually described in very unfavourable colours, as intolerant, perfidious, and sanguinary. The Negroes possess less activity, information, and vigour of mind; but with the usual habits of barbarous life, they are simple, gentle, hospitable, and affectionate.

Religion. The religion of Abyssinia is a corrupt form of Christianity. The Christian religion has also been introduced into some of the European settlements. The prevailing religion of Egypt, the Barbary States, and of the nations of the interior as far south as the Niger, is Mahometanism. The remainder of the inhabitants, so far as known, are generally pagans.

Agra, subah or pr. Hind., bounded N. by the province of Delhi, E. by Oude, S. by Malwa, and W. by Agimere; about 250 miles long, and 180 broad. It is watered by the Ganges, Jumnah, and Chumbul, and produces indigo, sugar, cotton, and all kinds of grain, except rice, for which the soil is not sufficiently moist. It is divided into 13 districts.

Agra, called by the Mahometans Akbarabad, city, Hind., capital of the province of the same name, and seat of the British civil authority, on S. side of the Jumnah; 92 SSE. Delhi. Lon. 77. 56. E. Lat. 27. 12. N. Pop. estimated in 1818, at 60,000. It was originally a village, till in 1501, the emperor Sekunder Lody built a city on its site, and in the 16th century the emperor Akbar built a palace here, and it continued the seat of empire till 1647, when Delhi became the capital. In the 17th century it was one of the largest and most celebrated cities of India, 14 miles in circuit, fortified, and said to contain 600, or 800,000 inhabitants. The houses are built of stone, and of several stories, but the streets are so narrow as scarcely to admit of a palanquin. The greatest part of the city is now a heap of ruins, and almost uninhabited.—About 3 miles below the city is the Taje Mahel, perhaps the most superb mausoleum in the world, built of white marble, inlaid with precious stones, between 1631 and 1640. Six miles north of Agra is the mausoleum of Akber. From the top of the minaret in front of it, the spectator's eye may range over a flat country, 30 miles in extent.—The Baptist and Church missionary societies have missionaries at Agra. Dr. Corrie, under the direction of the latter, arrived here with Abdool Messee, a celebrated native convert, in 1813.

Aix-la-Chapelle, or Aachen, (an. Aquis Grannum.) t. Pru., Lower Rhine, capital of a government of the same name; 25 NE. Liege, 36 SW. Cologne. Lon. 5. 54. E. Lat. 50. 52. N. Pop. 27,164; including the military 32,500. H. 3,000. It is an old, but well built town, and contains a gymnasium, 3 hospitals, and 4 Catholic, and 1 Lutheran church. The manufactures, though greatly decreased, are still considerable, and consist chiefly of cloth, with copper and brass works. Here are 7 warm baths, very celebrated, and much resorted to, being used only for external ablutions.

Aix-la-Chapelle was long the favourite residence of Charlemagne, for some time the capital of his empire, and the place where he was buried in 814; hence it was long customary to hold here the coronation of the emperors of Germany. It held the second rank among the imperial towns of the circle of Westphalia. Two celebrated treaties of peace have been concluded here; the first in 1668, between France and Spain; the second in 1748, between the powers engaged in the war of the Austrian succession. The town was entered by the French troops in 1794, and continued in the possession of France 20 years, till the fall of Bonaparte, and was capital of the dep. of the Roer.—A congress of the allied sovereigns of Europe was held here in 1818.—The government is divided into 13 circles. Total population.....127,901

Chief towns. Cahawba is the seat of government. Mobile and Blakely are the principal ports. The other most considerable towns are St. Stephens, Huntsville, and Claiborne.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Alabama, Tombigbee, Mobile, Black-Warrior, Coosa, Tallapoosa, Tennessee, Chatahoochee, Perdido, Cahawba, and Conecuh.

Face of the country. The southern part of the state, which borders on the gulf of Mexico and Florida, for the space of 50 or 60 miles wide, is low and level, covered with pine, cypress, and loblolly; in the middle it is hilly, with some tracts of open land or prairies; in the northern part it is somewhat broken and mountainous. The Alleghany mountains terminate in the northeast part. The forest trees in the middle and northern divisions, are post, black, and white oak, hickory, poplar, cedar, chesnut, pine, mulberry, &c.

Soil. The soil is various, but a large part of it is excellent. In the south it is generally sandy and barren; and a part of the high lands are unfit for cultivation. A large portion of the country, which lies between the Alabama and Tombigbee, of that part watered by the Coosa and Tallapoosa, and of that on the Tennessee, consists of very excellent land. On the margin of the rivers there is a quantity of cane bottom land of great fertility, generally from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ mile wide. On the outside of this is a space, which is low, wet, and intersected by stagnant water. Next to this river swamp, and elevated 10 or 15 feet above it, succeeds an extensive body of level land, of a black, rich, soil, with a growth of hickory, black oak, post oak, poplar, dogwood, &c. After this comes the prairies, which are wide spreading plains, or gently waving land, without timber, clothed with grass, herbage, and flowers, exhibiting in the month of May the most enchanting scenery.

Productions. Cotton is the staple production, and is raised in great quantities. Other productions are corn, rice, wheat, rye, oats, &c. Iron ore is found in several places, and coal abounds on the Black Warrior and Cahawba.

Climate. The climate in the southern part, of the bottom land bordering on the rivers, and of the country bordering on the Muscle Shoals, is unhealthy. In the elevated country, the climate is very fine; the winters are mild, and the summers pleasant, being tempered by breezes from the gulf of Mexico.

The population of this state from the time when the first settlement was commenced, has increased with remarkable rapidity. Occupying the valley of the Mobile and its tributary streams, the Alabama and Tombigbee, its position in an agricultural and commercial point of view is highly advantageous, and from the fertility of its soil, and the value of its productions, it may be expected to become an important member of the Union.

Indians. The Cherokee Indians occupy the NE. corner of the state; the Creeks the eastern part, and the Chickasaws and Choctaws the western.

Alabama, r. which gives name to the state so called. It is formed by the junction of the Coosa and Tallapoosa, and flowing SSW., unites with the Tombigbee, 45 miles above Mobile bay, to form the river Mobile. From the junction to Claiborne, 60 miles, it is navigable at all seasons for vessels drawing 6 feet water. From Claiborne to the mouth of the Cahawba, about 150 miles, the river has 4 or 5 feet of water. From the mouth of the Cahawba to the junction of the Coosa and Tallapoosa, the navigation generally continues good, the river affording 3 feet of water in the shallowest places. The river is subject to great variation by rising and falling. See Coosa and Tallapoosa.

Albany is the seat of the state government, and in point of population, wealth, and trade, the second city in New York. It contains a stone state house, a city hall, a jail, an almshouse, a state arsenal, 2 market-houses, 4 banks, a museum, an academy, a public library containing about 4,000 volumes, and 11 houses of public worship, 3 for Presbyterians, 2 for Dutch Reformed, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Lutherans, 1 for Roman Catholics, 1 for Seceders, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Methodists. The Albany Academy has a principal, 2 assistants, and about 150 pupils. The building is a very spacious and elegant edifice, built of red freestone. The state house, several of the churches, some of the other public buildings, and many of the private houses, display much elegance and taste. A large proportion of the houses are of brick. The appearance of the city, with regard to buildings, both public and private, and various accommodations, has been greatly improved within the last 15 years.

Albany has a pleasant and healthy situation, near the head of the tide water, on one of the finest rivers in the world, which is navigable as far as the city for sloops of 80 tons. The great western canal, which is to unite the Hudson with Lake Erie, commences here. The surrounding country is fertile and populous. The exports consist of wheat, other kinds of grain, and various articles of produce. The manufactures are considerable, consisting of iron, tobacco, hats, candles, beer, rum, &c. In 1818, 4 newspapers were published here, 1 daily, and 3 twice a week.

It is a place of considerable trade; the streets are tolerably wide, and the houses well built; but the principal thing on which it prides itself, is the university, consisting of 24 colleges, and has been the most considerable in Spain, next to Salamanca, founded at first by Sancho, king of Castile, in 1253; and afterwards more fully, in the beginning of the 16th century, by Cardinal Ximenes. Here it was that the Cardinal printed his celebrated Polyglot Bible completed in 1517, called from the place the Complutensian Polyglot. The university buildings are scattered throughout the city, most of them now in ruins. The town contains 3 parish churches, 4 hospitals, and 28 cloysters.

The country round is fertile, pleasant, and well cultivated; and without the walls is a fountain called Corpa, the water of which is so good, so pure, and of so excellent a taste, that the kings of Spain have taken it into their own power, and let it out to farm, and use the water themselves at Madrid.—Cardinal Ximenes lies here interred in the chapel of the college, which himself founded.

Although it is, from its fertility, called the granary of Portugal, it is the least populous province of the kingdom, containing 4 cities, 105 towns, and 358 parishes. The thin population probably arises from its being always the seat of war with Spain. The lands are said to be ill cultivated; and the roads, through the badness of the police, every where full of vagabonds and beggars. The principal towns are Evora, Elvas, Campo-Mayor, Portalegre, Villa-Viciosa, Estremos, Moura, Castello-de-Vide, Mouraon, Serpa, and Aronches.

Aleppo, or Haleb, (an. Beræa and Chalybon.) city, Syria, and capital of a pachalic of the Ottoman empire, situated partly on the plain, and partly on two or three rising grounds; 70 SE. Alexandretta, its port, 180 N. Damascus, 300 N. by E. Jerusalem. Lon. 37. 10. E. Lat. 36. 11. N. Pop. about 250,000, of whom 30,000 are Christians, and 5,000 Mahometans; the great mass being Turks and Arabs. Hassel states the population at only 150,000; others at 350,000, and some still higher. It is the seat of a Greek patriarch, an Armenian, a Jacobite, and a Maronite bishop. The Christians enjoy perfect toleration.

It is encompassed with walls of hewn stone, which are thought to be mostly of the Mameluke building; these walls are not above 3 miles in circ.; but the suburbs, especially those to the N. are extensive; so that the whole is 7 or 8 miles in circuit. The streets and bazars, or shops, are laid out like those of Damascus; and it has about 20 principal caravansaries, besides several smaller ones. It is esteemed one of the cleanest and best built cities throughout the Turkish dominions, and the inhabitants are accounted the most polished of the Turks; the houses are of hewn free-stone, and some of the mosques and kans are very magnificent. Several of the former have large domes, but these are raised so little above the buildings, (which are not high enough in proportion to their size,) that they appear low and flat, though built at a great expense. The Jews and Christians of the country live in one of the suburbs, and the Franks in one quarter of the city. The houses are all terraced over so that one can go from house to house on the tops of them, there being no partitions erected; and the air of Aleppo is so fine, that the inhabitants lie on the tops of the houses during the summer season. On N. and W. sides of the town, at a small distance, runs the small river Caie or Howick, which, passing through the gardens, renders them very pleasant. The river is lost in a morass, about 4 miles E. of Old Aleppo. The gardens produce a great variety of fruit; there are small houses in them, to which company often retire for some weeks in the summer, and they may be hired at any time for a party of pleasure. On whatever side the city is approached, its numerous minarets and domes present an agreeable prospect to the eye.

Aleppo cannot be esteemed a place of importance in war, though it is the key of Syria to the N.; but as a commercial city, it is the emporium of Armenia and Diarbekir; sends caravans to Bagdad and into Persia; and communicates with the Persian gulf and India by Bassorah; with Egypt and Mecca by Damascus; and with Europe by Alexandretta and Latakia. Commerce is principally carried on by barter. The chief commodities are raw or spun cottons; linens, clumsily fabricated in the villages; silk stuffs, manufactured in the city; copper; coarse cloths; goats' hair from Natolia; the gall-nuts of Curdistan; and the merchandise of India, such as shawls and muslins; and pistachio-nuts, of the growth of the neighbourhood.

The pachalic of Aleppo extends from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean; its principal produce is wheat, barley, and cotton; but the greatest part of the lands, though naturally fertile, are uncultivated. In the ancient registers, they enumerated 3,200 villages, while at present they scarcely find 400. Pop. about 800,000. Sq. m. 23,532.

N. Pop. in 1800, 4,196; in 1810, 7,227; in 1820, 8,218; blacks, 2,603. Houses in 1817, 1,385. It contains a court-house, a jail, an alms-house, a theatre, an academy, 2 Lancasterian schools, 6 banks, 2 insurance offices, a library containing 2,600 volumes, and 8 houses of public worship, 2 for Presbyterians, 2 for Episcopalians, 1 for Friends, 1 for Methodists, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Roman Catholics. There is also an elegant brick market-house of 3 stories, in which are kept reading rooms, a museum, and some offices.

The situation of Alexandria is considerably elevated, with easy and gradual descents to the river, which is neatly wharfed for about half the length of the city, with water sufficient for the largest merchant ships. The streets intersect each other at right angles; a great part of them are neatly paved, kept clean, and well lighted. The city is favourably situated for commerce, nearly at the head of the tide water of the Potomac, having an extensive and fertile back country, and carries on a brisk trade. The articles of export are flour, (of which, in 1817, 209,000 bbls. were inspected), Indian corn, tobacco, &c. The shipping belonging to this port in 1820, amounted to 15,806 tons.

Alexandria, or Scandaria, or Skanderik, city and s-p. Egypt, at the western extremity of the Egyptian coast, on the borders of the Lybian desert, on a narrow neck of land between the sea and lake Mareotis, communicating with the Nile by a canal, called the canal of Cleopatra; 100 NW. Cairo. Lon. 30. 5. E. Lat. 31. 13. N. Pop. according to Legh 12,000; Hassel 20,000. H. 2,000. The resident inhabitants are said by some not to exceed 5,000.

This city was founded by Alexander the Great 331 B. C., became the capital of Egypt under the Ptolemies, the seat of science, arts, commerce, and royal magnificence, and is said to have contained 600, or 800,000 inhabitants. It was for a long time the most commercial city in the world, the centre of commerce to the three continents. The merchandise of India was brought up the Red Sea, landed at Berenice, thence transported across to the Nile, and conveyed down the river to Alexandria. In 640 it received a fatal blow, being taken by the caliph Omar, and subjected to the Saracen yoke. It is generally believed that its library containing 400,000 MSS., some say 700,000, the boast of antiquity, was then reduced to ashes. The caliphs transferred the seat of government to Cairo. But the final downfall of the city was effected by the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, in 1497, after which the trade of India was turned into a different channel.

Alexandria is divided into the new and old town, the latter much the most extensive. It is partly enclosed by walls of Saracenic structure, nearly 6 miles in circuit; the greater part of the space enclosed being covered with ruins. These walls, however, include but a small part of the ancient city of the Ptolemies, whose ruins can be traced over more than 3 times that circuit. An immense accumulation of ruins, mostly buried in the sand, Pompey's Pillar, Cleopatra's Needles, the cisterns, the catacombs, and some columns, entire or broken, scattered here and there, are the sad remains of this once rich and splendid city. Pompey's Pillar is a very remarkable monument 94 or 95 feet high. Cleopatra's Needles are 2 obelisks, one thrown down, the other standing, 58½ feet long, and 7 feet broad on each side at the base. They are composed each of a single block of granite covered with hieroglyphics. One of these has been presented to the king of England, and is to be placed in the city of London. The reservoirs, or cisterns, by which Alexandria was supplied with water, excavated the whole ground on which the city was built. A conduit, communicating with the canal of Cleopatra, extended the whole length of the city. The catacombs present a very extraordinary monument. They begin at the extremity of the old city, and extend a considerable distance along the coast, forming what was called the Necropolis, or City of the Dead. They consist of small sepulchral grottos cut in a soft calcareous rock; the interior plastered with mortar; and each grotto that has been opened is found to contain 3 coffins, piled over each other. The Ptolemies erected, on an island opposite to the mouth of the harbour, a pharos, or light-house, which was considered one of the wonders of the ancient world.

New Alexandria, even in its present state of decay, is to Europeans the most interesting of the cities of Egypt. It is built along the coast, occupying only a small part of the space within the walls. The houses have flat terraced roofs; the streets narrow, awkwardly disposed, have neither pavement nor police; the eye of the traveller is arrested by no public or private edifice; and but for the ruins of the old city, there would be nothing to attract a moment's attention. The population consists of Turks, who compose the officers of government and the garrison; Copts, who are numerous, but held in contempt; and Jews, in whose hands are almost all the commercial transactions. The commerce is considerable, embracing all that the European states carry on with Egypt. There are 2 harbours, the old and the new. The former is safe but difficult to enter; the latter is shallow, has a rocky bottom, and is exposed to violent north winds. Christians are permitted to enter only the new harbour.—Natives, Appian, Arius, Athanasius, Euclid, Herodian, Hypatia, Origen, Philo, &c.

ALGIERS, country, Africa, on S. coast of the Mediterranean, forming a considerable part of the ancient Mauritania Tingitana and Numidia; bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by Tunis, W. by Morocco, and S. by the Atlas; extending from about Lon. 8. 30. E. to 1. 30. W.; about 500 English miles from E. to W., and generally not much more than 100 from N. to S.

Divisions. It is divided into 3 provinces, Constantina in the east, Titterie in the middle, and Tremecen in the west.

Provinces.

Chief Towns.

Titterie, or Algiers Proper.....Algiers & Boujeiah.
Constantina.....Constantina & Bona.
Tremecen, or Tlemsan.....Tremecen & Oran.

Population. The amount of the population is uncertain, and is variously estimated. Hassel estimates it at 1,800,000; Graberg at 2,500,00.

Inhabitants. The towns are inhabited by Moors, Jews, and Turks, with a few Europeans; the plain country chiefly by Arabs; and the mountains by Berbers.

Religion. The religion of the country is Mahometanism.

Government. Algiers is governed by a Dey, who is elected from the army, assisted by the douwan, a council of 30 chief officers. The second officer is styled the Aga, or commander of the janizaries. The government is a tumultuous despotism.

Navy. In 1812 the naval force consisted of 8 ships of from 36 to 50 guns, 10 or 12 sloops of war, and 30 gun boats.

Face of the country. Algiers is traversed by branches of the great chain of Atlas, particularly those called Lowat and Ammer. The highest summit is Jurjura. The country towards the sea is mostly level.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Shelliff, Seibus, Zowan, and Rummel.

Soil. Although there are some sandy deserts, yet the soil is, in general, exceedingly fertile.

Productions. The productions consist of wheat, barley, rice, Indian corn, various fruits and vegetables, cattle, sheep, &c.

Minerals. There are mines of lead and iron. Salt is found in great abundance. Near the lake of Marks there is a mountain composed of this mineral: and near Argew are salt pits about 6 miles in compass.

Climate. The climate is fine, having neither the sultry heat of summer, nor the piercing cold of winter. During the 12 years that Dr. Shaw resided in this country, the thermometer fell but twice to freezing point.

Algiers, supposed to be the ancient Icosium, capital of the kingdom of Algiers, in the province of Titterie, on the coast of the Mediterranean; 300 W. Tunis. Lon. 3. 1. E. Lat. 36. 49. N. Pop. estimated in 1730, according to Dr. Shaw, at 120,000; 15,000 Turks, 30,000 Cologlis, 60,000 Moors or Berbers; the remainder Jews, Christians, &c. Malte-Brun and Hassel state it at 80,000; an English officer, belonging to the expedition of 1816, as high as 180, or 200,000. Houses, according to Hassel, 15,000.

It is built on the declivity of a hill, on which the houses rise gradually in the form of an amphitheatre, and terminate nearly in a point at the summit, presenting, when viewed from the sea, a beautiful and magnificent spectacle. It is only $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile in circuit, but the population is great in proportion to the extent; every house being 3 stories high, and occupied by several families. The principal street passes through the city from east to west, 1,200 paces long, and only 12 feet broad; the others are so narrow, that 2 persons can scarcely walk abreast. The houses are all white-washed, and have flat roofs, and are so accommodated, that visits to a considerable distance can be performed on the tops of them.

The largest buildings are the dey's palace and the seraglio of his favourite wife; both of great magnitude. There are 10 great mosques and 50 smaller ones. The city is surrounded by a wall, a league in circuit, 12 feet thick, 30 high towards the land side, and 40 towards the sea; having 5 gates. There are also 4 castles; but all these fortifications on the land side are of little avail, and the harbour only is well defended. The harbour is a work of immense labour, formed by 2 moles. It is 130 fathoms long, 80 broad, and 15 deep. Its entrance is defended by a round castle and several batteries.

Algiers is known chiefly as a naval and piratical town. It was bombarded by an American fleet under commodore Decatur in 1816; and afterwards, in the same year, on the 27th August, by a British fleet under lord Exmouth, when the Algerine fleet was reduced to ashes, and the batteries, by which the harbour was defended, were completely destroyed. The dey was compelled to restore all Christian captives without ransom, and to abolish for ever Christian slavery in his dominions.

Near it runs a small river or brook, called Motril, which joins the Rio Frio not far off. It is supplied with water by an aqueduct, erected by the Moors, and which still remains. About a quarter of a league from the town are celebrated warm baths, used both externally and internally. The kings of Spain have erected a grand building for the use of invalids, with baths of free-stone regulated to different degrees of heat; a little above the baths are frightful rocks, whence issues the Rio Frio, so called from the extreme coldness of its waters; it falls with a mighty noise on several natural cascades.

Allahabad, or Allahbash, i. e. the house of God, pr. Hind., bounded N. by Oude and Agra, E. by Bahar, S. by Goondwanah, and W. by Malwa and Agra; about 270 miles long, and 120 broad. Pop. estimated at 7,000,000; $\frac{7}{8}$ Hindoos, the rest Mahometans. Chief rivers, Ganges, Jumnap, Goomty, Caramnassa, Tonse, and Cane. The principal cities are Allahabad, Benares, and Jionpour. In 1798, this province was ceded to Great Britain.

Allahabad, city, Hind., capital of the province of Allahabad, at the confluence of the Ganges and Jumna, 820 miles, by the course of the Ganges, from the sea; 222 SE. Agra, 300 S. Delhi. Lon. 81. 50. E. Lat. 25. 27. N. Pop., according to Hamilton, exclusive of the garrison, 20,000, according to others, 90,000, or more.

It was formerly called Praeg or Priag; and is supposed by D'Anville and Robertson to be on the site of the ancient Palibothra, the capital of the Prasii. It has a very large and strong fort, situated on a tongue of land between the two rivers, completely commanding the navigation of both. The city does not make a handsome appearance, having but a few brick buildings. Nine tenths of the buildings of the natives are of mud. The confluence of the Ganges and Jumna is regarded by the Hindoos as peculiarly sacred, and Allahabad is one of the most esteemed places of Hindoo worship and ablution. Every summer multitudes of pilgrims resort hither, and perform their purifications for nearly 2 months. The Baptist missionary society have 2 missionaries here.

Alps, long ridge of mountains, in the heart of Europe, dividing Italy from France, Switzerland, and Germany. They begin near the mouth of the Var on the gulf of Genoa, and stretch in the form of a crescent from the county of Nice, through Provence, Dauphiné, Savoy, Switzerland, Tyrol, Swabia, Salzburg, Carinthia, and Carniola; between 600 and 700 miles in length.

The principal subdivisions are the following; 1, the Maritime Alps, extending from near Monaco to Mount Viso; 2, the Cottian Alps, extending from Mount Viso to Mount Senis; 3, the Greek Alps, continuing the chain to Little St. Bernard; 4, the Penine Alps, extending from St. Bernard to St. Gothard, including besides other summits, Mont Blanc 15,680, and Mont Rosa 15,552 feet high, the most elevated mountains in Europe; 5, the Rhætian Alps, distinguished into 3 parts, the High Alps, reaching from St. Gothard to Lago Maggiore, the Lepontine Alps, lying to the south of the Pennine and High Alps, and the Rhætian Alps, properly so called, extending through the southern part of the country of the Grisons; 6, the Tyrolese, or Tridentine Alps, in Swabia, including Mount Brenner; 7, the Noric Alps, between the territory of Salzburg and Venice; 8, the Carnic Alps, between Carinthia and Friuli to Mount Acca; 9, the Julian, Pannonian, or Venetian Alps, extending from Mount Acca, between Carinthia, Carniola, and Friuli to the gulf of Carnero, in Istria.

The Alps are the most elevated range of mountains in Europe, and are composed of immense masses of rock piled upon each other.

The principal summits are covered with perpetual snow. Two of the most celebrated glaciers are those of de Boisson and de Bois in the valley Chamouni in Savoy. Some of the principal passages of the Alps are those of Col di Tenda, Col d'Argentiere, Simplon, Mont Cervin, Furka, Col de Seigne, Great St. Bernard, Col Terret, Little St. Bernard, St. Gothard, &c.

Alps, Suabian, or Wurtemberg, rugged chain of mountains, in SE. corner of Wurtemberg; 70 miles long, and from 15 to 20 broad, between the Danube and Neckar. It is properly a continuation of the Schwarzwald. The highest part is between Sultz and Tubingen; bleak and uncultivated, but not covered with perpetual snow.

Altai, or Altaiian Mountains, (an. Annibi), vast chain of mountains, Asia, extending from Lon. 68. to 170. E., terminating at East Cape. They stretch about 5,000 miles, assuming different names, supposed to be connected with the Uralian chain, and form for a great distance the southern boundary of Siberia. The component parts are exceedingly various, consisting of granite, porphyry, &c., also limestone, marble, and petrified shells; they also abound in valuable mines of gold, silver, copper, iron, &c., which are wrought to a great extent. In the Kunetzko range a remarkable mass of native iron was found, weighing 1,440 lbs. The silver mines of Kolyvan, the richest of the kind in the Russian empire, employed, in 1786, about 54,000 workmen. The highest summits of the Tcharinsh range are computed at 10,730 feet above the sea.

Its head branches are the Tunguragua and Ucayale, both rising in Peru, the former from lake Lauricocha in Lat. 10. 29. S., the latter formed by the Apurimac and Beni, the head waters of which are between Lat. 16. and 18. S. The general course of the river is N. of E. and, including its windings, is upwards of 4,000 miles in length. It flows into the Atlantic under the equator; the width of the mouth is stated at 150, by some at 180 miles. Boat navigation commences at Jaen de Bracomoros, in Quito; and it is said, that vessels of 400 or 500 tons may navigate from the mouth throughout almost the whole extent. The depth is stated at from 30 to 40 fathoms 1,500 miles from the ocean, and the tide is perceptible 600 miles. Its descent in a straight course of 1,860 miles was found by Condamine to be 1,020 feet; about $6\frac{1}{4}$ inches in a mile; but the place where the tide is first perceived is only 90 feet above the sea. Its current is very rapid and violent.

It drains an extent of country about 1,600 or 1,700 miles from N. to S., receiving the waters of about 200 rivers, some of them as large as the Danube. From the north it receives the Santiago, Morona, Pastaza, Tigre, Napo, Negro, Putumayo, Yupura, Yaguapiri, Curupatuba, Yari, &c.; from the S., the Guallaga, Ucayale, Cuchivara, Yahuari, Cayari, Madeira, Topayos, Xingu, Guanapu, Muju, &c.

The banks are clothed with immense and impenetrable woods, which afford a haunt to tigers, bears, leopards, wild boars, and a great variety of venomous serpents; also abounding in birds of the most beautiful plumage, and apes of the most fantastic appearance. The waters swarm with alligators, turtles, and a great variety of fish. The vegetable productions that grow wild are cacao, cinnamon, vanilla, pines, &c. The country is adapted to coffee, sugar canes, rice, maize, plantains, lemons, limes, and oranges. Here are also precious woods, as cedar, red wood, holly wood, pine, &c. In the rainy season the river overflows its banks, and waters and fertilizes the adjacent country.

Amazonia, country, S. America, bounded N. by New Grenada and Guiana, E. by the Atlantic and Brazil, S. by Buenos Ayres, and W. by Peru; 450 leagues in length, and 320 in breadth; inhabited by Indian nations. It is claimed by the Portuguese, as a part of Brazil.

Amboyna, isl. in the Eastern seas, belonging to the Dutch. It is the chief of the Molucca, or Spice islands, all the rest being dependent on its jurisdiction; 128 leagues E. Batavia. Pop. in 1796, 45,252. It is from 50 to 60 miles long, narrow, and deeply penetrated by 2 bays, which divide it almost asunder into 2 peninsulas, called Leytimor and Hitoe. It is mountainous, the climate hot, but salubrious, subject to great periodical rains, with thunder and hurricanes. Its vegetable products are of great variety and value, but the cultivation of the clove tree is chiefly attended to. The tree grows to the height of 40 or 50 feet. The cloves are collected twice a year, and the average quantity produced in the island exceeds 650,000 lbs.

The Amboynese are indolent, effeminate, and licentious, of slender size, with regular features, and almost black. The Mahometan religion was introduced here about 1515; and the Roman Catholic by the Portuguese in about 1546. There are a number of Protestant schools and Protestant clergy kept up in different districts; and missionaries are supported here by the London and Baptist missionary societies.

Amboyna, capital of the island of Amboyna, on the peninsula of Leytimor. Lon. 128. 15. E. Lat. 3. 40. S. Pop. about 6,000. It is a neat town, regularly built; the streets wide, unpaved, crossing each other at right angles; the houses of one story, covered with palm leaves, furnished with frames of matted, instead of glass windows. The south part is inhabited by Europeans, the west by Chinese. It is much subject to earthquakes. The medium temperature is from 80 to 82 deg.; lowest 72 deg.

Ambozes, three round islands in the Atlantic, near the coast of Africa, which give name to a country on the continent of Loango. At a distance they appear like rocks, yet are populous and fertile, and the surrounding sea yields plenty of fish. The inhabitants form a kind of democracy, and chiefly live by incursions on their neighbours. That part of the continent called Ambozes, is a mountainous tract between the rivers Real and Camerones; the soil is fertile, and yields most of the productions of Guinea, except the palm, which however flourishes in the islands. Lon. 72. 40. E. Lat. 23. N. It was anciently a magnificent city, and celebrated for its vast commerce in silk, velvets, tapestries, and several other productions of India, and contained 1,000 mosques. The mosque and tomb of the founder are built of stone and marble, the last of exquisite workmanship. The walls of the city are yet remaining, they are 6 miles in circ., and contain 12 gates. At this time not a quarter of the space within the walls is inhabited, and nothing but the vestiges of the suburbs is to be seen. But it still remains one of the best fortified towns in the province.

AMERICA, one of the four grand divisions of the earth, usually accounted the largest of the whole, though some make it inferior in extent to Asia. It is upwards of 9,000 miles in length, and from 1,500 to 1,800 in average breadth. It lies between Lat. 80. N. and 56. S. Sq. m. according to Templemann, 14,323,000; Graberg, 15,743,000; Hassel, about 16,000,000.

Discovery. America was unknown to the civilized world till near the end of the 15th century, and from this circumstance it is often called the New World. It was discovered in 1492, by Christopher Columbus, a native of Genoa, who sailed under the patronage of Ferdinand and Isabella, sovereigns of Castile and Aragon in Spain. The first land that was seen was one of the Bahama islands. The continent took its name from Americus Vesputius, a native of Florence, who made discoveries 5 or 6 years after the first discovery by Columbus.

Features. Nature in this continent assumes an aspect of peculiar magnificence; for whether we consider its mountains, its rivers, its lakes, its forests, or its plains, America appears to be distinguished in all these leading features, by a grandeur not to be found in the other parts of the globe.

Climate. This continent has every variety of climate; but the climate generally differs from that of the other by a greater predominance of cold. It is calculated that the heat is at least 10 degrees less, than in the same parallels in the eastern continent.

Productions. America abounds in almost all the varieties of the animal, vegetable, and mineral productions.

Animals. This continent contains a great variety of wild animals; and since its discovery the various domestic animals of Europe have been introduced, and are now found in great abundance. In comparing animals of the same species, in the two continents, it has been found, in a majority of instances, where a difference in size has been ascertained, that the American animal is larger than that of the eastern continent.

Birds. The birds are exceedingly numerous, and are said to be more beautiful in their plumage than those of Asia and Africa, but in their notes less melodious. The condor, which frequents the Andes of S. America, holds, on account of its size, strength, and rapacity, the preeminence over all the feathered creation.—

Reptiles are numerous and many of them venomous.—Insects abound, and in many parts are very offensive.—The American waters are remarkable for the variety and abundance of their fish.

Vegetables. America produces every kind of grain, fruit, pulse, herbs, plants, and flowers, native to Europe; besides a great variety of others, as cocoa, cinnamon, pepper, sarsaparilla, vanilla, scarlet dye, a great variety of balsams, mahogany, logwood, Brazil wood, sassafras, aloes, barks, gums, resins, and medicinal herbs.

Minerals. This continent, particularly South America and Mexico, abound in gold and silver, and such ample supplies have been carried to European markets, that the value of these metals was greatly diminished after the discovery of the American mines. America also produces an abundance of copper, quicksilver, iron, antimony, sulphur, nitre, lead, loadstone, and marbles of every sort. It has various kinds of precious stones, as diamonds, rubies, emeralds, amethysts, alabaster, &c.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants may be divided into three classes, Whites, Negroes, and Indians.

The whites are descendants of Europeans, who have migrated to America since its discovery. They constitute more than one half of the population.

The negroes are mostly held in slavery, and are descendants of Africans, who were cruelly forced from their native country.

The Indians are the aborigines, and are mostly savages. They are of copper complexion, fierce aspect, tall, straight, athletic, and capable of enduring great fatigue. They are hospitable and generous, faithful in their friendships, but implacable in their resentments. Their common occupations are hunting, fishing, and war.

They are generally of roving habits, and live in a very scattered manner, in small tribes, of usually from 500 to 5,000 souls. Their numbers are gradually diminishing.

At the time of the discovery of America, the natives in some parts, particularly Mexico and Peru, were considerably advanced in civilization. For the most part they continue a distinct people, and retain their savage customs, but in some instances they have mingled with the white population. The Indians still occupy the greater part of America. In North America they possess almost all the country, except the southern and eastern parts; that is, the northern part of Spanish America, most of the territory of the United States which lies west of the Mississippi, and nearly all the vast regions which lie north of United States' territory, and west of the St. Lawrence. In S. America they possess Patagonia and most of the interior of the continent.

Population. The population is not accurately known; the amount is uncertain, and variously estimated. No data exist from which the number of Indians can be computed; and the population of most of the countries settled by Europeans is very imperfectly ascertained. The whole amount may probably be between 30 and 36 millions. Volney and Pinkerton estimate it at 20,000,000; Hassel at upwards of 21,000,000; Graberg, at 24,000,000; Malte-Brun at 40,000,000; and Le Sage at 50,000,000.

America is divided into two parts, North and South America.

NORTH AMERICA includes Greenland, belonging to Denmark; New Britain, Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, belonging to Great Britain; and the United States. The Russians have some settlements on the northwest coast of the continent. The West India islands lie between North and South America, and are not considered as belonging properly to either.

Population. The following table exhibits the population of the principal divisions according to the latest authorities. The number of Indians in N. A. is unknown.

United States.....	9,638,000
Indians within U. S. territory, about.....	400,000
British possessions.....	630,000
Mexico.....	7,500,000
Guatemala.....	1,200,000
West Indies.....	2,400,000
	21,768,000

Cities. Some of the principal cities are New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, New Orleans, Mexico, Puebla, Guanaxuato, Quebec, and Montreal.

Mountains. The principal ranges are the Alleghany mountains, the Rocky mountains, and the Cordilleras of Mexico.

Rivers. The principal are the St. Lawrence, Mississippi, Missouri, Del Norte, M'Kenzie's, Nelson's, Columbia, Colorado, Arkansas, Red River, Platte, Kansas, Yellowstone, and Ohio.

Lakes. The largest are Superior, Huron, Michigan, Erie, Ontario, Winnipeg, Slave Lake, Champlain, Athapescow, Lake of the Woods, and Nicaragua.

Islands. The principal islands belonging to North America are Newfoundland, Cape Breton, St. John's, Rhode Island, Long Island, and the Bermudas, on the eastern coast; Queen Charlotte's Islands, Quadra and Vancouver's Island, King George III. Islands, and the Fox Islands, on the western coast.

Bays and Gulfs. The most considerable of these are Baffin's, Hudson's, James', St. Lawrence, Delaware, Chesapeake, Mexico, Campeachy, and Honduras.

SOUTH AMERICA includes New Grenada, Venezuela or Caraccas, Peru, Chili, and Buenos Ayres or La Plata, claimed by Spain; Brazil and Amazonia, belonging to Portugal; Guiana, belonging to Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands; and Patagonia, which is in possession of the Aborigines. The countries claimed by Spain have for a number of years past been in a revolutionary state, and in all of them independent governments have been proclaimed, and maintained with various success.

Population. The population of the several countries is not well ascertained, and is variously estimated. The following statement is from some of the latest authorities.

	Pop.	Capitals.
N. Grenada.....	2,000,000.	Santa Fe de Bogota.
Venezuela.....	750,000.	Caraccas.
Guiana.....	250,000.	Paramaribo.
Peru.....	1,500,000.	Lima.
Brazil.....	2,500,000.	Rio Janeiro.
Chili.....	1,000,000.	St. Jago.
Buenos Ayres.....	2,000,000.	Buenos Ayres.
	10,000,000

Religion. The religion of all South America, with the exception of the Indian nations and that part of Guiana, which belongs to the British and Dutch, is Roman Catholic.

Mountains. The Andes are the highest mountains on the American continent.

Rivers. Some of the principal rivers are the Amazons, La Plata, Orinoco, Parana, Paraguay, Uruguay, Madeira, Tocantins, St. Francisco, and Magdalena.

Lakes. There are few large lakes. The most considerable are Parima, Maracaybo, and Titicaca.

Islands. The principal islands are the Falkland islands, Terra del Fuego, Chiloe, Juan Fernandes, and the Gallipagoes.

Amherst, p-t. Hillsborough co. N. H.; 30 S. Concord, 48 NW. Boston, 53 W. Portsmouth, W. 484. Lat. 42. 51. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,554; in 1820, 1,622. In the central part of Amherst there is a pleasant plain on which a handsome village is built, containing a court-house, a jail, a Congregational meeting-house, and a printing office. The Souhegan flows through the southern part of the town. The courts for the county are held alternately here and at Hopkinton.

Amherst, p-t. Hampshire co. Mass.; 8 NE. Northampton, 90 W. Boston, W. 394. Pop. in 1810, 1,469; in 1820, 1,917. This is a very excellent agricultural town, and contains 2 parishes, in each of which there is a pleasant village with a Congregational meeting-house. The west parish contains a flourishing academy and a seminary, styled the Collegiate Charity Institution. The academy had, in 1821, 170 students, 69 of them studying Greek and Latin. The building is a handsome brick edifice of 3 stories.

The Collegiate Charity Institution was first opened Sept. 18, 1821. The building is a handsome brick edifice, 100 feet by 40, of 4 stories, containing 32 rooms. The situation is elevated and remarkably pleasant, giving an extensive view of the surrounding country. The basis of the institution is a fund of $50,000, subscribed by individuals, five sixths of the interest of which is appropriated to the education of indigent young men for the ministry. The other sixth part is added annually to the principal.

The officers are, a president, who is also professor of divinity, a professor of mathematics and natural philosophy, a professor of languages, a professor of oriental literature, and a tutor. The number of students in the first quarter was 56. The terms of admission and course of study are similar to those of Yale College. The institution has a library of about 800 volumes, and a good philosophical apparatus. There are 3 vacations in a year; the 1st, from the fourth Wednesday preceding the third Wednesday in Sept., 4 weeks; the 2d, from the third Wednesday in Dec., 6 weeks; the 3d, from the first Wednesday in May, 3 weeks. The property is held in trust by the board of trustees of Amherst academy. There are also 5 overseers appointed by the subscribers to the fund, whose duty it is to see that the interest is applied according to the condition of the subscription.

It takes its name from Amstel and Dam, being, as it were, the dam or dike of the Amstel.

In the beginning of the 13th century, it was the residence of a few fishermen; but soon after, growing populous, the Earls of Holland gave it the title and privileges of a city. It has been frequently enlarged, particularly in the years 1593, 1595, 1601, 1612, 1650, and 1675; at which last date it was extended to its present size, and surrounded by a wall, and a large ditch, 80 feet wide, full of running water; the walls were fortified with 26 bastions; there are 8 gates towards the land, and one towards the water. Being situated in a marshy country, the foundation of the whole is laid on piles of timber driven into the earth, close to each other and clamped together with iron; the form is semicircular, and the streets are, in general, well paved. There are three prodigious sluices and a great number of stone bridges over the canals, which cross the city in many parts, and render the streets clean and pleasant; the canals are deep, their sides are lined with hewn stone, and have generally rows of trees planted on each side.

The port is about $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in length, and about a thousand paces in breadth, capable of receiving 1,000 vessels, and always containing a great quantity of shipping. Towards the sides of the haven the city is enclosed by large piles driven into the ground, joined by beams placed horizontally; and lying low it would be constantly liable to inundations, if it were not secured by dikes and sluices.

The city contains 25,244 houses, 11 Calvinist churches, 2 French, 1 English, 1 Scotch, 1 Arminian, 3 Lutheran, 3 Baptist, 1 Moravian, 1 Quaker, and 24 Catholic; and 5 Synagogues. The public establishments are numerous and on a respectable footing; the principal are the arsenals and dock yards, the academy of sciences, the society of Felix Meritis, devoted to philosophy and the fine arts, the athenæum or college, the anatomical and surgical college, the botanic garden, the house of correction or rasp house, the orphan house, a number of hospitals, &c.

The stadthouse, where public business is conducted, is esteemed one of the finest structures in the world; it is a square building of free-stone, the front of which is 282 feet long, the depth of its sides 255 feet; 90 feet high in front, 116 to the top of the cupola. The great hall is particularly magnificent. Indeed all the chambers are adorned with beautiful sculptures by the best masters, and paintings by Rembrandt, Rubens, Vandyke, &c. This immense fabric, like the rest of the city, is built on 13,659 piles. The architect was John Campen, who made the model in 1648, and the first stone was laid the 28th of October the same year: the expense to make the whole complete is said to have been £3,000,000. The bourse, or exchange, is of free-stone, and built in the year 1615, on 2,000 piles; its length 200 feet, and its breadth 124.

Amsterdam was, and continues to be one of the grand central points of exchange in Europe. It formerly had bill transactions with every trading town of note on the globe, and was esteemed before the French revolution the second city in Europe, in point of commerce.

It suffered great embarrassments during the French revolution, but has been recovering since 1815.—Natives, Spinoza, Rotgans, Hooft, &c.

Andalusia, p-v. Bucks co. Pa.; W. 148.

Andalusia, properly Vandalusia, (an. Bætica), pr. Spain, divided into Upper and Lower; Upper Andalusia comprehends Grenada; Lower Andalusia comprehends Jaen, Cordova and Seville. Considered as a particular province, it is most westerly of the southern part of Spain; and is bounded N. by Estramadura and La Mancha, E. by Mercia, S. by the sea and the Straits of Gibraltar, and W. by Portugal: 170 miles long, and 180 wide. Lower Andalusia is, without doubt, one of the finest countries of Spain, the richest and most fertile; producing abundance of oil and grain; also honey, sugar, silk, and wine. Its herds of cattle are numerous, and its horses are esteemed the best in the kingdom. The inhabitants are descended in part from the Saracens, and differ much from the natives of Castile and other parts of Spain, in their physiognomy and character. Pop. in 1787, 788,153. Chief cities, Seville and Cadiz. For Upper Andalusia, see Grenada.

Andaman, (an. Bonæ Fortunæ Insulæ), several islands, in the bay of Bengal, the 2 most considerable called the Great and Little. The Great Andaman is about 50 leagues long, and 8 wide. In the centre of it is a high mountain, named Saddlepeak, about 2,400 feet high. The Little Andaman is about 8 leagues in length, and 5 in breadth. The inhabitants are of a gentle, harmless disposition, and employ themselves in cultivating their lands; they raise great plenty of rice and fruit, which they sell to European vessels that pass that way. 'All that voyagers have related of uncivilized life,' says Major Symes, 'seems to fall short of the barbarism of the people of Andaman. The natives of New-Zealand and Terra del Fuego are in a relative state of refinement, compared to these islanders.' The population of Great Andaman, with all its dependencies, hardly exceeds 2,000 or 2,500 souls, dispersed in small societies along the coasts, or on the lesser islands in the harbour, never penetrating far inland.—The Great Andaman lies in Lon. 92. 40. to 93. 15. E. and Lat. 11. 22. to 13. 55. N. The Little Andaman lies about 10 leagues S. of the other.

Andes, now Angers, and Pietola.

Andes, called by the Spaniards Cordilleras de los Andes, an immense chain of mountains, extending throughout South America, near the western side. They extend from Cape Pilares, in the straits of Magellan, northwards to the isthmus of Darien. A mountainous ridge passes through the isthmus of Darien, dividing further north into various branches, styled the Cordilleras of Mexico. To the north of Mexico the principal range takes the name of the Rocky mountains, and reaches to the Frozen ocean, the northern limits of the American continent. These are by many considered as parts of one continued range, but term Andes is usually limited to the mountains in S. America.

The Andes differ greatly in their general aspect and character, being in some parts blended together into an entire mass, and in others divided into two or three distinct ridges. In Chili they are about 120 miles in breadth, presenting numerous summits of prodigious height. To the north they diverge in a straggling manner; and in Peru they are formed into three irregular ridges, which continue to about Lat. 6. S., where they are formed into a single chain. They divide again in Quito into two chains; and further north, between Lat. 2. and 5. N., they are formed into three parallel ridges, which are again blended together between Lat. 6. and 7. N.

Between the two ridges in Quito there is a plain from 5 to 6 leagues in breadth, of great fertility, well cultivated, and thickly settled, having populous towns, and though under the equator, yet owing to its great elevation, which is about 9,000 feet above the sea, it possesses a temperate and delightful climate.

The Andes are the highest mountains on this continent, and present numerous summits covered with perpetual snow. Many of them are volcanic, and in many are found the precious metals. The most elevated summit is Chimborazo; and of those that have been recently liable to eruptions the highest, is Cotopaxi, which is the most elevated burning mountain in the known world.

It is situated on SE. side of the Merrimack, and is also watered by the Shawheen. It contains 2 pleasant parishes. The north parish contains a cotton and woollen manufactory, a Congregational meeting-house, and an academy, styled Franklin Academy. The south parish contains cotton and woollen manufactories, a paper-mill, a printing-office, a Congregational meeting-house, a theological seminary, and an academy, styled Phillips Academy, which was founded in 1778 by the Hon. Samuel Phillips of Andover, and the Hon. John Phillips, LL. D. of Exeter, N. H. It is one of the oldest, best endowed, and most respectable institutions of the kind in the United States. It has a principal, 3 assistants, a teacher of sacred music, a teacher of penmanship. The number of students is limited to 130, and is commonly full; all pursuing the study of the learned languages. The building, which is an elegant brick edifice of 2 stories, 80 feet by 40, ranges with the buildings of the theological seminary, about 40 rods distant.

The Theological Seminary was founded in 1807, and is very liberally endowed. It has a pleasant, healthy, and elevated situation, which commands a beautiful and extensive prospect. The buildings consist of dwelling houses for 3 of the professors; a steward's house, containing a dining hall; and 3 public edifices of brick; Phillips Hall, 90 feet by 40, of 4 stories, containing 32 rooms for students; Bartlet Chapel, 94 feet by 40, containing a chapel, library, and 3 lecture rooms; and Bartlet Hall, 104 feet by 40, of 4 stories, containing 32 suits of rooms for students. The library contains upwards of 5,000 volumes. There are 4 professors, the associate professor of sacred literature, the Abbot professor of christian theology, the Bartlet professor of sacred rhetoric, and the Brown professor of sacred rhetoric and ecclesiastical history. The number of students, in 1822, was 120. The whole number educated from the organization of the seminary to 1821, was 254.

The course of education is completed in 3 years, and accordingly the students are divided into 3 classes, Junior, Middle, and Senior. As a qualification for admission, the constitution requires a liberal education, and testimonials of good character and talents. Tuition and room rent are afforded free of expense to all, and the charity funds give support to such as are indigent. A public examination is held on the 4th Wednesday of September. There are 2 vacations of 6 weeks each; one commencing after the public examination; the other on the first Thursday in May.

Pop. stated from 40, to 100,000; by Hassel at 50,000; Malte-Brun, 80,000.—H. 6,000. Greek and Armenian abp. see. It stands in a lofty and imposing situation, surrounded by mountains, but also amidst numerous gardens, abounding in excellent fruits. It is surrounded with walls, and defended by a castle, situated on a high and perpendicular rock, formerly deemed impregnable. The climate is pleasant, the city neat, the streets causewayed with blocks of granite, and the inhabitants are accounted the most polished of Natolia; about 9,000 Christians, the rest Turks. It contains numerous mosques, 7 Armenian, and 3 Greek churches.

The trade is less than formerly, yet great quantities of yarn, Angora stuffs, and shawls are made here. The shawls are fabricated of the hair of the Angora goat, which is of a long silken texture. Each shawl costs the maker about £25 sterling. These goats are raised extensively in the neighbouring country; also opium, honey, wax, &c.—Ancyra was made the metropolis of Galatia by Nero, and in the time of Caracalla, was called Antoniana.

Anjou, before the revolution, a province of France; 90 miles in length, and 60 in breadth; bounded N. by Maine, W. by Bretagne, S. by Poitou, and E. by Touraine. The chief towns were Angers, La Flèche, Château, Gontier, Saumur, Baugé, Montreuil, Bellay, Brissac, &c. The productions of the land are wines, (chiefly white,) wheat, rye, barley, oats, flax, hemp, almonds, chestnuts, and most kinds of fruit. It feeds a great number of oxen, cows, and sheep. Coals are dug in several parishes. There are quarries of marble and freestone, and the best slate in the kingdom. The commerce of Anjou consists principally in wine, brandy, grain, cattle, cloth, stuffs, ironmongery, &c. The central portion now forms the department of the Maine-and-Loire; the other small portions belong to the departments of Lower-Loire, Vendee, Indre-and-Loire, Sarthe, Ille-and-Vilaine, Mayenne, and Two-Sevres.

Annamooka, or Rotterdam, one of the Friendly Islands in the S. Pacific Ocean. It is of a triangular form, each side whereof is about 3 or 4 miles. A salt water lake in the middle of it occupies not a little of its surface, and in a manner cuts off the SE. angle. Round the island, that is, from the NW. to the S., round by the N. and E., lie scattered a number of small isles, sand-banks, and breakers. These, together with Middleburg, or Eaoowee, and Pylstart, make a group, containing about 3 degrees of latitude, and 2 of longitude; named by Capt. Cook the Friendly Islands, or Archipelago, as a firm alliance and friendship seemed to subsist among their inhabitants; and their courteous behaviour to strangers entitled them to that appellation. Lon. 174. 31. W. Lat. 20. 15. S.

Annan, (an. Trimontium), t. Scot., Dumfries; 14 SE. Dumfries, 56 S. Edinburgh. Lon. 3. 15. W. Lat. 55. 0. N. Pop. 3,341. It is situated on the left bank of a river of the same name, near its entrance into the Solway Frith. It has some trade in wine and corn; vessels of 250

Lon. 2. to 3. W. Lat. about 4. 40. N.

Antab, or Aintab, (an. Antiochia ad Taurum.) t. Syria; 40 N. Aleppo, 130 SW. Diarberkir. Lon. 37. 25. E. Lat. 36. 25. N. This town is situated on 2 hills and the valley between them, and is about 3 miles in circ.; the small river Sejour runs by the town, and is conveyed to the higher parts of it by aqueducts, carried round the hills which branch out from the river above the town; there are many fine springs that rise about this place.—The air of Antab is esteemed to be very good; the people live mostly on the hills, and have their shops in the valley; these being built at the foot of the hills, and having flat roofs, one insensibly descends upon them, and the covered streets which lie between them; so that it surprises any one, when he supposes he is walking on the ground, to look down through holes, which give light to the streets beneath, and see people walking under his feet. The trade of the town is in coarse calicoes, woollens, leather, and hides. The Mahometans have 5 principal mosques. The Christians are all of the Armenian communion, and have a church.

Antioch is remarkable for its extraordinary situation, as well as for having been one of the most considerable cities of the east. It was the residence of the Macedonian kings of Syria for several hundred years; and afterwards of the Roman governors of that province, so that it was called the queen of the east, and was, at one time, the third city in the world for splendour and population. It is also remarkable in ecclesiastical history, for being the see of the great patriarchate of the east, in which St. Peter first sat; it was here that Paul and Barnabas separated for the work of the gospel, the latter embarking for Cyprus. It is often mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles; and here the disciples of Christ first obtained the name of Christians; so that it was called the eye of the eastern church. It is now the see of a Greek patriarch.

This city, anciently renowned for the luxury of the inhabitants, is now no more than a ruinous town; whose houses, built with mud and straw, and narrow and miry streets, exhibit every appearance of misery and wretchedness. These houses are situated on S. bank of the Orontes, at the extremity of an old decayed bridge.

Notwithstanding the unpolished manner of its present inhabitants, Antioch is better calculated than Aleppo to be the emporium of Europeans. By clearing the mouth of the Orontes, which is 18 miles lower down, boats might be towed up the river, though they could not sail up; the current being too rapid. About 9 miles from the city is a large lake, which abounds with fish, especially eels.—Native, St. Chrysostom.

Antiparos, (an. Oliaros,) one of the Greek islands in the Archipelago, about 16 miles in circ.; 4 W. Paros. Lon. 25. 13. E. Lat. 37. 2. N. In it is a remarkable grotto, much admired and spoken of by travellers, and by some produced in evidence of the vegetation of stones. The grotto is 1000 feet long, 300 broad, and at the deepest part 254 below the surface of the earth. Its sides are covered with beautiful crystallized marble, and present, when properly lighted up, a scene of the greatest magnificence and splendour.—Of the island, cotton and wine are the chief products.

Antwerp, Anvers, or Amberes, city, Neth., capital of a province of the same name, on E. side of Scheldt ; 25 N. Brussels, 28 ENE. Ghent. Lon. 4. 24. E. Lat. 51. 14. N. Pop. in 1806, 59,035. H. 10,000. Pop. in 1817, 61,800. Bp. see. It is situated in a large plain, on the Scheldt, which is here 1,600 feet broad, and of great depth. The harbour is deep and commodious, capable of containing 1,000 vessels ; and by means of numerous canals these vessels can penetrate into the very heart of the town, and there deposit their cargoes. The harbour was enlarged by order of Bonaparte, and extensive dockyards, naval store houses, and a magnificent quay were constructed. The exchange is one of the finest in Europe.

It is a large well built town with streets wide and straight, and has a strong citadel with regular fortifications, a cathedral, very magnificent with a remarkably elegant tower 466 feet high ; 5 very large parish churches ; an academy of sciences, one of painting, a school of medicine and surgery, and other institutions. The stadt-house is an elegant building, and the depot, called the warehouse of the Baltic, is an edifice of vast dimensions. The inhabitants are employed in commerce, in jewellery, sugar refining, linen bleaching, and in manufacturing cotton, lace, and carpets.

Antwerp was in the 16th century the greatest place of trade in Europe ; and is said to have contained 200,000 inhabitants. The value of merchandise imported in the year 1550, the epoch of its greatest prosperity, is said to have amounted to 133 millions of gold ; and it was common to see 2,000 vessels at once in its port. Its commerce afterwards declined, till 1648 when it was effectually suspended, and the navigation of the Scheldt was closed by a stipulation in the treaty of Westphalia. Since the river has been opened, the trade has revived, and is now extensive.—Natives, Vandyck, Teniers, Seghers, Crayer, Floris, Brill, Ortehus, and Vorsterman.—The province of Antwerp is formed of the central part of the late duchy of Brabant. ARABIA, extensive country, Asia, being a great peninsula in the form of an irregular quadrangle; bounded N. by A. Turkey and the Euphrates, E. by the Persian Gulf and Arabian sea, S. by the Arabian sea, and W. by the Red sea, Egypt, and Syria.

Extent. It lies between Lon. 33. 30. and 59. 30. E. Lat. 12. 30. and 31. 30. N. About 1,500 miles long from N. to S. and 1,300 wide from E. to W. Sq. miles, according to Templemann, 1,166,000; Cannabich, 1,150,000.

Divisions. The ancients divided Arabia into 3 parts, viz. Arabia Felix, the southern part, Arabia Petraea, the N. W. part, and Arabia Deserta, the N. and NE. part; without assigning any definite limits or boundaries to each; and these divisions are in some respects recognized by the moderns.—The present civil divisions are 6, named by the natives Hedsjas, Yemen, Hadramaut, Oman, Lachsa or Hadsjar, and Nedsjed; the exact extent of which are scarcely better ascertained than the others.

Population. The amount of the population is very uncertain. Hassel estimates it at from 10 to 12,000,000.

Face of the country and soil. The general aspect of Arabia is a vast arid desert, interspersed with spots of fertile ground, and intersected about the centre by a range of mountains, supposed to stretch from the shores of the Red Sea by Mecca, to those of the Persian Gulf at the Bahrein islands. Water is generally scarce, and there are no rivers or lakes of any considerable size. The most fertile parts are situated near the sea. Of its mountains Sinai and Horeb are the most celebrated.

Productions and exports. The productions are coffee, rice, maize, frankincense, myrrh, gum-arabic, balsam, and other gums; dates, and various other fruits; honey and wax; and in the seas, coral and pearls. The exports best known to Europeans, are coffee, gum-arabic, myrrh, and frankincense.

Animals. The most noted animals are the camel and the horse. The chief dependence of the Arabian is on the camel, an animal peculiarly fitted for the inhabitants of a desert. The Arabian horses have been celebrated in all ages. They are held in high estimation, and great care is bestowed to preserve the purity of the breed. Their most usual colour is dapple-grey or brown, and one of the breed most highly esteemed, costs at least 2,000 Turkish piastres.

Climate. In the mountainous parts the climate is temperate, but in unsheltered situations the heat is excessive. A pestiferous wind, called the Simoon or Samiel, frequently surprises the traveller in the desert, and occasions instant suffocation. Whole caravans are sometimes overwhelmed by moving clouds of sand agitated by wind.

Towns. Mecca and Medina are celebrated places of pilgrimage. The principal seaports are Mocha, Mascat, and Jidda; but Sana is reputed the chief city.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants are styled Arabs. They boast of being descended from Ishmael, son of Abraham and Hagar; and on this account they have been called Ishmaelites and Hagarenians. They have been styled Scenites from their living in tents; also Saracens and Bedouins, i. e. robbers and wanderers. But the name now universally applied is that of Arabs, or Bedouin Arabs. They are divided into two classes; 1, the genuine Arabs of the desert, who have preserved in the greatest purity the character and manners of their ancestors; 2, the adulterated Arabs, who inhabit the cities, and who are more effeminate, and have lost, by intermixture with other nations, somewhat of their original character. The Arabs are in general an ignorant and superstitious people; in their stature, thin, with slender extremities, black eyes, hair, and beard, and of swarthy complexion. They have a reserved, dignified, and melancholy air; seldom provoked either to laugh or to weep. Their virtues and vices are peculiar to themselves. They are the firmest friends and the most implacable enemies. Their hearts are open and sincere; they are hospitable and generous; and in courtesy and urbanity of manners they may vie with the most civilized nations of Europe. But on the other hand, they have a natural disposition to war, bloodshed, and rapine. They are implacable and unrelenting; have no idea of forgiveness, and their thirst for revenge knows no satiety. The majority of them dwell in tents made of camel's hair, wandering about with their whole property from place to place. They are miserably lodged, and are abstemious and temperate. Their principal food is rice, pulse, and milk.

Religion. The Arabs are Mohometans.

Government. The patriarchal government has prevailed among these wandering people from the remotest antiquity; but it is in a manner ecclesiastical, because all civil proceedings rest on the law of the Koran. The authority of a Schieck over his tribe is that of a father of his family. The titles of the Arab chiefs or princes are Schiecks, Sheriffes, Imans, Caliphs, and Ermirs. In the most fertile districts monarchies of greater or less extent have existed from time immemorial.

Language. The Arabic is a copious and expressive language, abounding in synonymes. It is supposed to be the most extensive in the world, being spoken not only in Arabia, but also in Turkey, Tartary, Persia, a part of India and China, in Egypt, the Barbary States, and extensively in other countries in Africa as far south as the Niger.

Literature. The Arabians were, in the middle ages, eminent for literature and science; but they are now rude and ignorant, few of them being able to read and write.

Arabia Deserta, or Nedsjed, also called Berii Arbistan, or Beriara, is bounded N. by Syria, NE. by Syria and the Arabian Irac, E. by the Persian Gulf, SE. and S. by Arabia Felix, and

W. by Arabia Petræa and Syria. This country is for the most part desert, being intersected almost every where by high barren mountains, and many of its plains nothing but great sands and heaths, through some of which neither men, beasts, birds, trees, grass, or pasture are to be seen; the lands, however, that lie to the east along the river Euphrates, afford both plants and food for the inhabitants of some cities and towns seated on that part. Ana is the capital.

Arabia Petræa, or the Stony, called by the Arabs Hedjas, is bounded N. by Syria, E. by Arabia Deserta, S. by Arabia Felix, W. by the Red Sea, and NW. by Egypt; its extent from N. to S. is computed to be 180 miles, and from E. to W. 150. It was called Petræa, or Stony, from its rocks, though some rather derive it from Petra, its ancient capital, now commonly supposed to be Krac, lying on the isthmus, near the frontiers of Egypt. Though, in most respects, it much resembles Arabia Deserta, for its stony, sandy, and barren ground; yet it yields, in some parts, sufficient nourishment for cattle, whose milk, and camel's flesh, is the chief food of its inhabitants.

Arabia Felix, by far the most considerable of the three, was called Felix, or Happy, according to Ammianus Marcellinus, because it abounded in corn, cattle, vines, and odoriferous spices of all kinds. It was also called Sacred, on account of the fine gums and aromatic woods employed in sacrifices, which it produced. This part of Arabia contains the kingdoms of Yemen, Hadramaut, Oman, and Lachsa, with other smaller states.

Aracan, or Arrakan, or Reccan, or Mog, country, Asia, formerly an independent km., but since 1783 a province of the Birman empire; bounded N. by Meckley, E. by Birmah, S. by Pegu, and W. by the Bay of Bengal; about 510 miles long, and from 20 to 200 broad.

The air is good; the country abounds with meadows and pasture lands, well watered with rivers and brooks; the plains are exceedingly fertile, and the mountains green all the year round; though from August to October, which is their winter, the weather is for the most part wet and stormy. It produces great quantities of rice, cocoa-nuts, bananas, oranges, and many other kinds of excellent fruit. Pop. estimated at 2,500,000.

Aracan, city, Asia, and capital of a country of the same name; 240 SE. Calcutta. Lon. 93. E. Lat. 20. 38. N. ARKANSAS, or ARKANSAW TERRITORY, district of country belonging to the U. States, bounded N. by the territory and state of Missouri, E. by the Mississippi, which separates it from the states of Tennessee and Mississippi, S. by Louisiana and Mexico, and W. by Mexico. Between Lon. 90. and 100. W. Lat. 32. 40. and 36. 30. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,062; in 1820, 14,273; slaves, 1,617. It was erected into a territorial government in 1819.

Divisions. It is divided into the 7 following counties, which are subdivided into 30 townships. The population is given according to the census of 1820.

Counties.	Pop.	Counties.	Pop.
Lawrence.....	5,602	Clark.....	1,040
Phillips.....	1,210	Hempstead.....	2,248
Arkansas.....	1,260	Miller.....	999
Pulaski.....	1,923
		Total.....	14,273

Towns. The towns are few and small. Arkansas has hitherto been the seat of government, but Little Rock has been fixed upon to succeed it. Among the other small towns are Davidsonville and Cadron.

Rivers. The Arkansas flows through the central part; the Mississippi forms the eastern, and Red river a part of the southern boundary. The other principal rivers are White, St. Francis, and Washita or Ouachitta rivers.

Face of the country and soil. For the space of about 150 miles west of the Mississippi, the country is very level; afterwards it becomes hilly, rocky, and broken. The soil on the Arkansas, and on the rivers generally, is exceedingly fertile; but, with the exception of the parts bordering on the streams of water, the soil is poor for the space of 2, or 300 miles west of the Mississippi; beyond that it becomes very good. In the southern part of the territory the land is higher and better than in the northern. Natural meadows or prairies are abundant, some of them of immense extent. Throughout the most of the country there is a great scarcity of water.

Productions. Cotton and corn are the staple productions. The country is exceedingly well adapted to the raising of cattle. Wild animals and fowls are abundant, as the buffalo, deer, elk, otter, beaver, rabbit, racoon, wildcat, catamount, wolf, bear, &c.; wild geese, turkeys, quails, &c.—Of minerals, there are iron, lead, coal, salt, &c.—There are several salt springs, and 1,300 or 1,400 miles up the Arkansas is a tract called the salt prairie, which, according to Governor Miller, is covered for many miles, from 4 to 6 inches deep, with pure, white, crystallized salt.—About 150 miles NW. Arkansas are the famous Hot Springs. They are much resorted to by invalids, and are useful in chronic and paralytic affections. The temperature in the driest seasons is at boiling point, but subject to considerable variation.

Climate. The climate, though mild, is unhealthy to new settlers. The diseases are fever and ague, bilious fever, &c.

Indians. The principal tribes of Indians in this territory, are the Osages, Cherokees, Quapas, Choctaws, Cadoes, Camanches, &c.

Arkansas, or Arkansasaw, r. N. A. which rises in the Rocky Mountains, about N. Lat. 42, near the sources of the Del Norte, and near the borders of the territory of the U. States and Mexico. It forms a part of the boundary between the Missouri Territory and Mexico, flows through the central part of Arkansas Territory, and unites with the Mississippi, Lat. 33. 40. N. Its course is ESE. It is navigable for boats at some seasons 1,980 miles; its whole length is 2,170 miles. Its channel is broad, and its navigation safe, unobstructed by rocks, shoals, or rapids. Silver is found on this river, and much of the land on its banks is of the first quality.

Arkansas, or Arkansasaw, p-t. Arkansas Territory, in a county of the same name, on the Arkansas, about 70 miles above its mouth; W. 1,470. Lon. 91. 30. W. Lat. 33. 58. N. It was commenced before the beginning of the last century by the French, but has always been small. It contained, in 1820, a land office, a printing office, a jail, and 30 or 40 houses, mostly built of logs. The inhabitants, till within 3 years past, were mostly French and Catholics. It has been hitherto the seat of the territorial government.

Arkansas, Indians, N. A., on the Arkansas, 300 miles from its mouth. No. 600. They raise corn for sale, and are accounted friendly.

Arles, (an. Arelate,) city, France, and principal place of a district in Mouths-of-the-Rhône; before the revolution it was Abp. see; 7 posts NNW. Marseilles, 86 SSE. Paris. Lon. 5. 38. E. Lat. 43. 40. N. Pop. 18,470. H. 2,000. It carries on some trade in corn, wine, oil, fruit, sheep, and sausages, and has manufactures of serge, gold and silver articles, and salt-petre. The surrounding country is marshy and unhealthy, but fruitful. Many councils have been held here, particularly one in 314, against the Donatists. There are several monuments of antiquity yet remaining, particularly an amphitheatre and an obelisk. Arles was a considerable place when Julius Cæsar warred against the Gauls. Constantine was much pleased with its situation, and for some time made it the seat of empire. Euric, king of the Visigoths, made it his residence. It was sometime the royal city of the Burgundian kings, and the kingdom called also the kingdom of Arles, or Arelat.

Pop. 141,381. The linen manufacture flourishes in this county. The principal towns are Armagh, Lurgan, Blackwater-Town, and Portadown. The face of the country is diversified with hills, but the soil is fertile, and generally well cultivated. Two members are sent to parliament for the county, and one for Armagh.

Armagh, (an. Regia.) city, Ireland, and capital of the county, so called; 46 SSE. Londonderry, 62 N. Dublin. Lon. 6. 37. W. Lat. 54. 21. N. H. 1,268. Pop. in 1817, 7,010; 2,001 of the established church, 3,413 catholics, and 1,596 dissenters, mostly Presbyterians. It was anciently the metropolis of Ireland, and in the middle centuries an extensive and populous city, and celebrated as a place of learning, having at one period, according to the Irish historians, 7,000 students at its college. It is now the see of an archbishop, who is lord primate of all Ireland. This city was much decayed, but by the munificence of lord Rokeby, late archbishop, it was considerably increased; he built a handsome palace, and a noble house for the school, which is a royal foundation; to which he added a public library for the promotion of science. He also erected an observatory, with a liberal income for an astronomer, securing the endowments by several acts of the legislature.

Armenas, v. Syria; 35 W. Aleppo.

Armeni, t. Mingrelia; 30 SE. Isgaur.

Armenia, country, Asia, bounded N. by Georgia and Mingrelia, E. by Adirbeitzan, S. by Curdistan and Diarbekir, and W. by the Euphrates. The boundaries and extent are not well defined. By some it is described as including the province of Diarbekir. The western part is subject to the Turks, and styled Turkish Armenia, or Turcomania; the eastern to Persia, and is styled Persian Armenia. The southern parts are ruled by numerous independent chiefs, who acknowledge no other sovereignty. The chief town of Turkish Armenia is Erzerum; of Persian Armenia, Erivan.

The principal rivers are the Euphrates, Morad, Aras, Cars, and the head branches of the Tigris. The country in general is mountainous, and owing to its elevation, is cold for the latitude. Among its mountains is the celebrated Mount Ararat.—The general appearance of Armenia is described as very delightful and picturesque, its valleys beautiful and of great fertility, producing corn, wine, and fruits in great variety; and its climate temperate and healthy. Valuable minerals are found, as gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, salt, sulphur, nitre, bitumen, jasper, and marble.

The Armenians are of an active and roving disposition, and are the chief class of traders in the Persian empire. They are supposed to be a distinct race, seldom intermarrying with other tribes, and professing a peculiar system of Christianity, and are styled Monophysites or Eutychians.—Some parts of the country are inhabited by Turks or Mahometans.

ASIA, one of the great divisions or quarters of the world, surpassing in extent Europe and Africa, taken together. It lies east of Europe and Africa, and west of America; bounded N. by the Frozen Ocean, E. by the North Pacific Ocean and the sea of China, S. by the Indian Ocean and the Arabian Sea, and W. by the Red Sea, the isthmus of Suez, the Mediterranean, the Archipelago, the Dardanelles, the sea of Marmora, the straits of Constantinople, the Black Sea, the straits of Caffa, the sea of Azof, and Europe. The boundary between Asia and Europe, from the sea of Azof to the Frozen Ocean, is partly arbitrary, but it is generally understood to be formed by the rivers Don, Sarepta, Volga, Kama, and the Uralian mountains.

Extent. Asia lies between Lon. 26. and 190. E. Lat. 2. and 77. N.; being 7,583 miles in length, from the western shores of Natolia to East Cape in Siberia; and 5,250 in breadth, from the northern extremity of Siberia to the southern point of Malacca. Sq. m. according to Templemann, 13,591,100; Graberg, 15,301,700; Hassel, 16,282,800.

Principal states. The following are the principal states, with their estimated population.

States.	Pop.	Chief cities.
Russia in Asia.....	10,000,000.....	Astrachan.
Turkey in Asia.....	11,000,000.....	Aleppo.
Arabia.....	10,000,000.....	Mecca.

Hindustan	100,000,000.....	Calcutta.
Birman empire,	} 22,000,000.....	Ummera-
Siam, Laos, Malacca,		poora.
Islands; Borneo, Su-	} 15,000,000
matra, Java, Celebes,
&c.	391,000,000

Population. Asia is supposed to contain as much as 4-7ths of the whole population of the globe; but the amount is uncertain, and variously estimated. Volney estimates it at 240,000,000, Malte-Brun at 340,000,000, Gräberg at 366,000,000, Le Sage at 380,000,000, Hassel at 392,000,000, Pinkerton and others at 500,000,000.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Kian-Ku, Hoang-Ho, Oby, Lena, Enisei, Amur, Mecon, Irrawady, Ganges, Burrampooter, Indus, Euphrates, Tigris, and Jihon.

Mountains. The principal ranges of mountains are the Altai, Himaleh, Ural, Caucasus, Taurus, and Ghauts.

Islands. The Asiatic islands are very numerous and important. Some of the principal are Borneo, Sumatra, Java, Celebes; the Manillas, the Moluccas, the Japan islands, the Kurile islands; Ceylon, Cyprus, Rhodes, and Samos. There are besides a numerous class of islands sometimes considered as belonging to Asia, but now forming a fifth division of the globe, under the name of Australasia. See Australasia.

Climate. The climate of Asia admits of every variety, from the scorching heat of the torrid zone to the piercing cold of the polar circle. In no part, however, is the heat so great as in the tropical deserts of Africa. The transition from a hot to a cold climate is very sudden in Asia, owing to the elevation of the central parts, and to the ranges of high mountains.

Soil. The northern parts are generally sterile, but the southern are, for the most part, extremely fertile.

Productions. The productions of the southern part of Asia surpass, in luxuriance and delicacy, those of every other quarter of the globe, and form the grand support of European luxury.

Minerals. Asia is rich in mineral productions. Native gold is found in Assam and the islands of Celebes and Borneo; tin, in inexhaustible quantities, in Banca; diamonds in Golconda; rubies in Ceylon; topazes in Siberia and elsewhere; silver and other minerals in different parts.

Vegetables. The tea-plant is peculiar to Asia. The most useful vegetables, the bread-fruit and bamboo, are widely diffused; the former, along with rice, affording food to millions; the latter converted into almost every implement of domestic economy.

Animals. Some of the most valuable animals are indigenous to Asia. The horse is found wild on the northern confines of Persia. The elephant is trained to all kinds of service. The camel is a very important animal to Asiatics in performing the most arduous journeys.

Commerce. Foreign commerce is almost wholly in the hands of European nations and the United States. The internal trade is extensive, and is carried on chiefly by means of the camel, except in China, where there are great facilities for inland navigation.

Religion. A spirit of the most degrading superstition pervades nearly all Asia. The prevailing religions are Paganism and Mahometanism. The latter is the prevailing religion of Turkey, Arabia, and Persia; and is also diffused in Tartary, part of Asiatic Russia, Hindoostan, and many of the Asiatic islands. There are various forms of Paganism; some of the principal of which are, Shamanism, which exists in China and Japan under the title of the religion of Fo, and of which, in Thibet, the Grand Lama is the head; Bramanism, which prevails in Hindoostan, and some other parts; and the worship of Buddhu or Boodh, which prevails in the Birman empire, and is found also in various other countries in the southeast of Asia.—Christianity, under the form of the Greek and Armenian churches, exists to a considerable extent in the Turkish and Russian dominions. The Christian religion has also been introduced by the European settlements, and extensive exertions are now making to extend its blessings by means of missionaries and the diffusion of the scriptures.

Government. Despotism is almost the only government in Asia.

Asia is remarkable for being the region where the human race were first planted, and christianity established. Here was the residence of the Israelites, and the seat of the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian empires, and here were transacted most of the events recorded in the scriptures.

Asia Minor, the most western portion of Asia, lying between the Mediterranean and the Black Sea; the Archipelago and the river Euphrates; about 1,000 miles from E. to W., and 400 or 500 from N. to S. It is now under the Turkish government, divided into several provinces, of which Natolia and Caramania are the most considerable.—Asia, in the New Testament, sometimes means Asia Minor, and sometimes only a district in the western part of it, but never the continent of Asia. The name of Asia Minor is said to have been first used in the middle ages.

Astrachan, or Astrakhan, gov. A. Russia, bounded N. by Voronez and Saratov, E. by Tartary, SE. by the Caspian sea, SW. by Caucasus, and W. by the Don Cosacs. Pop. 362,000; or 383,000; Russians, Cosacs, Calmucs, Tartars, Armenians, Hindoos, Georgians, Persians, &c. Sq. m. 41,600. It is divided into 4 circles, Astrachan, Krasnoiarsk, Enotaevesk, and Tchernoïarsk. Chief towns, Astrachan and Uralsk. This government has been included within the government of Caucasus. It is watered by the Volga and Ural. The soil is generally barren, except on the banks of the rivers. It contains many salt lakes.

Astrachan, city, A. Russia, capital of the government of the same name, on an island, in the Volga, 52 miles above its entrance into the Caspian sea; 330 SSE. Saratov, 1,040 SSE. Petersburg. Lon. 47. 44. E. Lat. 46. 21. N. Pop. stated at 70,000, yet the permanent inhabitants are said not to exceed 30,000. H. 3,500. Abp. see. The population consists of a mixture of Russians, Armenians, Greeks, Tartars, Persians, Jews, Hindoos, English, and French. The city is 3 miles in circ., of very irregular figure, surrounded by a wall. It contains a cathedral, 25 Greek chh., 2 Armenian, 1 Cath., and 1 Luth., and 19 mosques. The city is mostly built of wood, except the churches and other public buildings, and many of the modern houses, which are mostly of stone or brick.

Astrachan is a place of great trade and manufacture. It was the design of Peter the Great to make it the centre of an extensive commerce, and with this design he encouraged the conflux of inhabitants from all parts. The situation is favourable for the object, being on the borders of Asia and Europe. By means of the Caspian sea and the Volga, merchandize may be exchanged between Persia, Armenia, and India, and the ports of the Baltic. The exports consist of fish, iron, cochineal, indigo, woollen and linen cloths, Russia leather, brocades, taffeta, satin, &c. There are said to be 40 manufactories of silk in the city, all in the hands of Armenians; extensive salt works are also carried on; also manufactures of gunpowder. Vines flourish luxuriantly in the neighbourhood, from which white wine is made; grapes are also sent to Petersburg. The imports consist of cotton and cotton stuffs, raw and manufactured silk, shawls, furs, &c. There is a considerable trade in jewels and precious stones.—Astrachan was anciently the capital of a kingdom in the country of Capchac, belonging to the Mongol Tartars, and extending as far as Moscow.—The Edinburgh missionary society support 2 missionaries here. Here are schools and a printing press, from which 15,000 copies of portions of the Scriptures are annually issued.

Asturia, or Asturias, pr. Spain, bounded N. by the sea, E. by Biscay, S. by Old Castile and Leon, and W. by Galicia. Its length is about 144 miles, and breadth 44. Pop. 347,176. Sq. m. 3,880. It is commonly divided in Asturia d'Oviedo, and Asturia de Santillana, named from their chief towns. The face of the country is rugged, and towards the S. are the mountains, which divide it from Leon and Old Castile, branches of the Pyrenees, covered with vast forests; yet the soil produces a sufficiency of corn, great quantities of fruit, and excellent wine. There are also mines of gold and vermilion. The horses of this country are in great esteem. The principal towns are Oviedo, Santillana, and St. Andero. The oldest son of the king of Spain takes the title of prince of Asturias, and bears the arms of the country.

It is situated on an elevated peninsula, formed by a large bend of the Hockhocking, which meanders about the town. The situation is pleasant and healthy, and commands an extensive prospect. It contains a court-house, a jail, and about 40 houses, and has valuable mills in its vicinity. Pop. of the township 1,094.—An institution is established here, styled the Ohio University, which is endowed with 46,000 acres of land, yielding about 2,300 dollars annually. A considerable part of this is appropriated to the support of an academy, which is in a flourishing state. A college edifice of brick, large and elegant, was erected in 1817.

Franklin College, which together with the incorporated academies of the state, is styled the University of Georgia, was incorporated and established at this place in 1784, but did not go into operation till 1803. The buildings consist of one college edifice of brick, 3 stories high, calculated to accommodate 100 students; 2 chapels, one of brick, the other of wood, a president's and a steward's house of wood. The library contains about 2,000 vols. The philosophical apparatus cost $4,000. The funds consist of 100,000 dollars in bank stock, together with some lands. In 1821, a bill passed the assembly of Georgia, appropriating $25,000 for the erection of a new college edifice, and a permanent annual endowment of $8,000 for the support of the institution.

The college is under the direction of 15 trustees; and of a senatus academicus, composed of the trustees and the governor and senate of the state. The executive government is entrusted to a president; 3 professors, 1 of languages, 1 of chemistry, and 1 of mathematics and natural philosophy; and 1 tutor. The number of students in 1821, was 99. Commencement is held on the 3d Wednesday in June. There are 2 vacations, one in the summer, of 3 weeks; the other in the winter, of 8 weeks.

Connected with the college there is an academy or free grammar school, which had, in 1821, 80 students.

Athens, now called Athiniah, Atini, and Setinnes, t. Eu. Turkey, in Livadia, anciently the capital of Attica, and the most celebrated city of Greece; 46 ESE. Corinth, 60 SE. Livadia, 100 NE. Misitra, 300 SW. Constantinople Lon. 23. 46. E. Lat. 37. 58. N. Pop. stated from 8, to 12,000; according to Galt, 10,000; $\frac{3}{4}$ Greeks, $\frac{1}{4}$ Turks. Greek abp. see. Modera Athens is a small open place; the streets very narrow and irregular; and the houses mostly mean and straggling. It contains a number of churches and chapels, mosques and public baths. The exports consist of wool, silk, wax, oil, olives, honey, and fruits. The honey from Mount Hymettus was in great repute in ancient times, as it is also at the present day. The famous streams of Ilissus and Cephisus, flow into the gulf of Engia at some distance from the town, and are in modern times almost dry. Of the 3 harbours, Phalerum or Phalereus, Munychia, and Piræus, the last is the most famous, now called Porto Leone, or Porto Draco. It is 5 miles from the town, and is frequented by a few French and English traders, but retains scarcely a memorial of its ancient aspect.

Athens was in ancient times the most powerful and splendid city of Greece, the greatest seat of learning and arts in the world, and the birth place of the most distinguished orators, philosophers, and generals of antiquity. Notwithstanding the hard fate which it has undergone, there are still, in the remains of its public edifices, ample testimonies of its former grandeur. While the ruins of Argos, Sparta, Corinth, Delos, Delphos, Olympia, Thebes, Elis, and most other once famous places of Greece, disappoint the traveller by their insignificance, many of those of Athens remain in a state little inferior to their original splendour. The hard and stony soil on which the principal part of the city was built, has prevented any considerable sinking of the temples and other great monuments, in a lapse of more than 2,000 years. In addition to this, a dry atmosphere has protected the stone from corrosion, and preserves to the work of the architect and statuary all its original gloss and polish.

The most interesting object of modern Athens, perhaps of Greece, is the Acropolis or citadel, of which a considerable portion is still in existence. The rock on which it stands is lofty, abrupt, and almost inaccessible; its summit is flat and $\frac{3}{4}$ mile in circuit. It has been converted into a fortress, and is surrounded by a thick rampart. The propylea formed the entrance to the parthenon, or temple of Minerva, the grand display of Athenian magnificence, and one of the most interesting remains of antiquity existing; now converted by the Turks into a mosque. The Areopagus, or hill of Mars, which was almost in the centre of ancient Athens, is outside of the present town, and is used as a burying place. The Pnyx, or place for the assembly of the people, near the areopagus, is still nearly in its original state. The site of the Lyceum, the Stadium, and the Academy, can be easily traced. The Tower of the Winds is still entire, and adorned with admirable sculptures; as is also the temple of Theseus, except the roof, which is modern.

Athens has suffered during the late conflicts between the Greeks and Turks. In 1821, after having been in the possession of the Greeks, it was reoccupied by the Turks, and during the engagement it was set on fire, and the lower part of the town was mostly consumed.

It is inhabited by Greek monks, who have 22 convents, varying in their dimensions, construction, and situation, but all of them remarkable for their beauty or magnificence. Each convent has its abbot, with a number of monks and lay labourers. The total number of resident inhabitants is about 6,000, all males; no women, or even female animals being permitted to enter the holy precincts of Mount Athos. The libraries belonging to the convents are said to contain 13,000 MSS. Nothing can exceed the beauty and variety of the scenery of this mountain. It is said to cast its shadow as far as the island of Stalimene, or Lemnos, upwards of 40 miles. Its height is stated by Kästner at 3,355 feet, and by Hassel 5,900 feet above the level of the sea; by others at 5,000.

Atlantic Ocean, name given to the sea which lies between Europe and Africa to the east, and America to the west. 3,000 miles wide.

Atlantis, or Atlantidis, isl. mentioned by the ancients. Its situation is not known, and even its existence has been doubted. Some suppose it to be N. part Africa, which is included between the Atlantic and the desert of Sahara; others think it is the continent of America; and others suppose it was a vast island W. of the straits of Gibraltar, now submerged.

Atlas, Great and Little, mountains of Africa: the Great Atlas extends from the desert of Barca, 240 miles W. Alexandria, to the coast of the Atlantic sea, to which it gives name; it is called by the natives Ayduacal.

The Little Atlas extends from the Straits of Gibraltar to Bona, in the country of Algiers, and is called by the natives Erriff. Both these are of such vast height, and for the most part covered with snow, as to be seen at a great distance off at sea. The highest parts and most difficult of access are those which run along the confines of the kingdom of Tremecen, and the coldest those that bound the dominions of Morocco. The greatest elevation has been computed at 13,200 feet above the level of the sea. As to the generality of the rest, they enjoy a much kinder climate, are not only inhabited by various tribes of Brebers, Arabs, and other African people; but in many places are well cultivated and fertilized, with a number of towns and villages dispersed in them, well inhabited and stored with abundance of cattle.

Augsburg, or Ausburg, (an. Augusta Vindelicorum), city, Bavaria, capital of the circle of the Upper-Danube, in a fertile and delightful country, between the Lech and Wertach, which unite not far from it; 35 NW. Munich. Lon. 10. 55. E. Lat. 48. 22. N. Pop. 28,902; Cath. 16,842, Luth. 12,060. H. 3,669. Bp. see. It stands on the side of a hill, called Rosenauberg, is a mile long, irregularly built, with narrow streets, surrounded with walls, with 4 principal gates and 6 smaller ones. It contains a cathedral, 6 catholic churches, 6 Lutheran churches, 8 monasteries, an academy, a gymnasium, a polytechnic school, and a public library of 29,000 volumes. It is distinguished as a trading town, being one of the most considerable in Germany; and through its agents and bankers, is the medium of commercial transactions between other countries, the exchange between Vienna and the rest of Germany being generally calculated with a reference to this city. It is a central depositary of the Neckar, Tyrolese, Italian, and Greek wines. Bookselling and publishing is an important branch of business. It has various manufactures in silver, cotton, wire, looking-glasses, tobacco, engraving, &c.—It was formerly the capital of the circle of Swabia, and more populous than at present. The streets are larger, longer, and more airy, than those of Nuremberg, Francfort, Coblenz, Cologne, &c., but more thinly inhabited. The fortifications are not of much account.

Augsburg will ever be famous on account of the Confession of Faith presented here by Luther and Melancthon, in 1530, to the emperor Charles V. and the princes of the empire; the publication of the well known interim in 1548; and the conclusion of the peace of religion in 1555.

The territories of the late bishopric of Augsburg, which lie scattered between the rivers Lech, Iler, and Danube, were among the indemnities given to the elector of Bavaria, as agreed on at the peace of Luneville. Pop. 86,000. Sq. m. 1,012.

Australia del Espiritu Santo, see Terra Australis del Espiritu Santo.

Austria, Circle of, the largest of the 10 circles into which the German empire was divided; bounded N. by Swabia, Bavaria, Bohemia, and Moravia, E. by Hungary, S. by the duchy and gulf of Venice, and W. by Switzerland and Bavaria; comprehending Austria Proper, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, part of Friuli and the Littorale, Tyrol, Voralberg, certain districts in Swabia, Brixen and Trent. Salzburg and part of Passau have been included since 1802. Pop. 4,442,700. Sq. m. 49,940.

Austria, Archduchy of, included in the above circle, bounded N. by Bohemia and Moravia, E. by Hungary, S. by Stiria, and W. by Salzburg and Bavaria. Pop. 1,665,862. Sq. miles 12,300. It is divided by the Ens into two parts, formerly called Upper and Lower Austria; now two provinces, styled Land above the Ens, and Land below the Ens, and to the former Salzburg is annexed, making the whole population 1,804,225. Sq. m. 15,016. Vienna is the capital of the Lower province, and Lintz of the Upper. The whole country has also been termed Lower Austria, in distinction from Tyrol, &c. styled Upper Austria. See Ens &c.

The country is populous, especially in the tract around the capital; the soil for the most part fertile, producing an abundance of corn, wine, fruits, saffron, mustard, &c.; also salt and iron. In the neighbourhood of the Danube are extensive plains. The climate is warm, and not remarkably healthy, the air being subject to noisome vapours.

AUSTRIA, Empire of, composed of various states situated in the central part of Europe, erected into an empire, in 1804; bounded N. by Bavaria, Silesia, and Poland, E. by Russia and Turkey, S. by Turkey, the Adriatic, and Middle Italy, and W. by Piedmont, Switzerland, and Bavaria.

The following table exhibits the divisions of the Austrian empire, with the extent and population according to Liechtenstern, adopted by Malte-Brun in 1820.

The annual increase of population is estimated by Malte-Brun at about 110,000 or 120,000.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants are composed of the following races:—

Slavonians.....	11,800,000
Italians.....	5,200,000
Germans.....	4,900,000
Hungarians.....	4,200,000
Walachians.....	1,400,000
Jews.....	420,000
Gipsies.....	30,000
Armenians, Greeks, Albanians, &c.....	40,000

Religion. The established religion is the Roman Catholic, but general toleration is granted, and members of the Protestant and Greek churches are numerous in Hungary, Transylvania, and Slavonia, where they enjoy considerable privileges. There are 9 Catholic archbishoprics, Vienna, Gran, Prague, Colocza, Lemberg, Olmutz, Laybach, Udina, and Milan. The numbers of the different denominations are stated by Hassel as follows:

Roman Catholics.....	21,970,000
Greek church.....	3,150,000
Reformed.....	1,310,000
Lutherans.....	1,910,000
Unitarians.....	45,000
Jews.....	450,000

Government. The government is monarchy nearly absolute, except in some of the states, particularly Hungary and Transylvania, it is limited by constitutional provisions.

Finances. The public debt was stated by Malte-Brun in 1820, at a little upwards of $400,000,000; the revenue at about $60,000.

Army and Navy. The army is composed of 220,000 infantry, 36,000 cavalry, and 20,000 artillery. The navy consists of only 12 frigates in the Adriatic.

Education. The principal universities are those of Vienna, Prague, Pest, Lemberg, Padua, and Pavia. Academies and gymnasia are numerous. Though Austria can boast of some distinguished names, yet in regard to literature she is greatly behind the north of Germany.

Cities. The principal cities are Vienna, the capital, Milan, Venice, Prague, Verona, Pest, Lemberg, Debreczin, Trieste, Gratz, &c. Trieste is the principal seaport, but Vienna is the centre of mercantile transactions. The greatest fairs are held at Bolzano.—Cities 782; market towns 2,096; villages 68,709; houses 4,300,000.

Rivers and Lakes. The Danube runs through the whole extent from west to east. The other principal rivers are the Dniester, Teisse, Save, Drave, Inn, Po, and Adige. The lakes are the Platten-see and Neusidl-see in Hungary, Traun-see and Atter-see in Austria Proper, Cirknitz in Carinthia, and Garda and Como in Lombardy.

Face of the country, &c. The face of the country is various. Stiria, Tyrol, Carinthia, and Carniola, are mountainous. Bohemia and Moravia are encompassed by mountains. The Carpathian mountains extend along the north-east of Hungary. A large portion of the soil is fertile, especially in Lombardy and Hungary.

Productions. The Austrian territories abound in various articles both of necessity and luxury; corn, wine, saffron, cattle, horses, gold, mercury, copper, iron, lead, precious stones, &c. are among her exports.—The manufactures consist of thread, cotton, linen, lace, silk stuffs, stockings, spirituous liquors, wrought iron, steel, and brass; glass, porcelain, earthen ware, &c. The imports consist mostly of raw materials, as wool, cotton, raw silk, rice, oil, drugs, spices; a great part of which come from the Levant. The foreign trade is, in a great measure, in the hands of Greek merchants.

Wine. The Austrian vineyards, according to the calculations of Blumenbach, in 1816, occupy 2,269,100 English acres, and produce annually 32,873,971 eimers, or 325,452,313 gallons; of which Hungary produces 18,000,000 eimers; the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom 5,890,000; Transylvania 3,640,000; Archduchy of Austria 2,094,358; and Stiria 1,000,000.

Grain. The annual produce of wheat, rye, barley, and oats, is calculated at 210,000,000 metzen, or 360,000,000 Winchester bushels; 1 metze being equal to $1\frac{3}{4}$ bushel nearly. Of this quantity Hungary produces 60,000,000 metzen; Galicia 34,801,500; Bohemia 24,369,361; Lombardo-Venetian kingdom 20,821,460; Moravia 17,718,004; Archduchy of Austria 14,242,188; Stiria 4,484,332.

These islands belong to Portugal. Angra, the capital of Tercera, is the seat of government; but Ponta del Gada, in St. Michael, is a more important town. The Azores were not known in Europe till about the middle of the 15th century. They are remarkable for their geological structure and volcanic appearance, exhibiting every mark of comparatively recent origin. They are covered with hills of various form and dimension, composed of lava either pulverized, or in the state of rock. They enjoy a clear, serene sky, and a salubrious and pleasant climate; and are exceedingly fertile in corn, vines, oranges, lemons, and other fruits, and abound in quadrupeds, both wild and tame. Their greatest inconvenience is their being subject, like the Canaries, to violent earthquakes, as well as to the fury of the waves, which frequently do incredible mischief to the inhabitants, by overflowing the low grounds. The most formidable earthquake on record, is that of 1591, which continued 12 days without intermission, and destroyed entirely the town of Villa Franca. Subterranean fire is indicated by numerous hot springs. The Azores are discovered at a great distance, 90 miles, according to Frezier, by the high mountain, called Pico, or Peak of the Azores.—The inhabitants are catholics, extremely ignorant and superstitious. Priests, monks, and nuns are numerous.—See St. Michael, &c.

Babuyca, t. Mexico, in Culiacan ; 65 NNE. Culiacan.

Babylon, city and capital of Babylonia and the Assyrian empire, on the Euphrates, 60 south of Bagdad. Lon. 44. 13. E. Lat. 32. 30. N. It was founded by the first descendants of Noah 2234 B. C., enlarged by Nimrod, the grandson of Noah, 2000 B. C., and greatly enlarged and embellished by Semiramis, the Assyrian queen, about 1200 B. C. ; and was the most magnificent and powerful city in the world. It was taken by Cyrus, B. C. 538, after he had turned the waters of the Euphrates into a new channel, and marched his troops by night into the city through the dried bed. The space enclosed within the walls has been computed at 72 sq. m. It stood on both sides of the river, in the form of a square, encompassed by a wall 55 or 60 miles in circuit, 87 feet broad, and 350 high, with 25 gates of solid brass on each of the sides, and on it were built 250, or according to others, 316 towers. This wall was accounted one of the seven wonders of the world.

Extensive ruins are now to be seen of this once magnificent city. They commence, according to Mr. Rich, who visited them about the year 1815, 2 miles above Helleh, and cover a considerable extent of country, consisting of vast mounds of earth, formed by the decomposition of materials of building, with bricks, bitumen, and pottery, strewed on the surface ; and of the remains of buildings and brick walls, in some instances surprisingly fresh. One of the mounds is 1,100 yards in length, and 800 in breadth, and elevated 50 or 60 feet above the level of the plain ; another is 700 yards square, appears to be the ruins of the finest buildings, and is a grand storehouse of bricks, whence great supplies of them have been obtained. The bricks are of the finest description, and are yet abundant. About 4 N. of Helleh are the ruins of the Kesr, or Palace. It is visible at a considerable distance, and is a remarkable ruin, which consists of several walls and piers, which face the cardinal points. One mile farther N. is the supposed ruin of the Tower of Belus. The N. side is 200 yards long, the E. 182, the S. 219, and the W. 136. The height of the highest part is 141 feet. But the most stupendous mass of all the ruins of Babylon is about 6 SW. Helleh, and is called by the Arabs Birs Nemroud, and by the Jews Nebuchadnezzar's Prison. It is 762 yards in circ., and the most elevated part is 198 feet high. It is built of fine burnt bricks, which have inscriptions on them, and are so well cemented together, that it is nearly impossible to separate one of the bricks from the others whole.

The fortifications are not very strong, yet it stood two sieges; one against the Portuguese, in 1658, and another against the English and Dutch, supported by a considerable corps of Portuguese, in 1705. It was taken by storm, by the British under lord Wellington, April 6, 1812.

Towns. Carlsruhe is the seat of government. Mannheim, Freyburg, and Heidelberg are the other most considerable towns.

Universities. There are universities at Heidelberg and Freyburg; and academies or gymnasia at Carlsruhe, Mannheim, Rastadt, and Bruchsal.

Religion. The religion of the grand duke and of a majority of his subjects is Lutheran; but there are many Catholics, some Calvinists, Jews, and Anabaptists.

The country, with the exception of a part of the Black Forest, in the Brisgaw, is more or less fruitful and populous. The chief employments are agriculture and raising cattle. The productions are, besides cattle and horses, grain, flax, hemp, potatoes, fruits, and wine. The mountains abound in wood, which is exported to Holland; also in iron, cobalt, and silver.

The late margraviate of Baden was made up of Baden-Baden and Baden-Durlach, and now forms the most important part of the present grand duchy, which was erected in 1806.

Baden, (an. Aquæ Thermae Inferiores), t. Baden, in the circle of the Murg, formerly the capital of the margraviate of Baden; 22 NE. Strasburg, 36 W. Stuttgart, 40 SSW. Heidelberg. Lon. 8. 18. E. Lat. 48. 46. N. Pop. 3,085. It is celebrated for its hot baths, situated on uneven ground among hills.

Baden, district, Switz., in Aargau, formerly an independent county, annexed to Aargau, in 1803; lying on both sides the Limmat; bounded W. by the river Aar, N. by the Rhine, and S. by the Reusz; about 30 miles long, and 8 to 12 broad. Sq. m. 176. Pop. in 1803, 46,381, mostly Catholics. The soil is fertile, and in general abounds in grain and fruit. The mountains yield excellent freestone, marble, and iron ore.

Baden, or Upper Baden, (an. Aquæ), t. Switz., in Aargau, capital of the above district, on the Limmat; 14 NW. Zurich, 27 SE. Bâle. Lon. 8. 12. E. Lat. 47. 24. N. Pop. 1,653. It is an ancient town, and its antiquity is indicated by divers monuments. About $\frac{1}{2}$ mile distant are the celebrated warm baths, from which it takes its name, known by the Romans by the name of Thermæ Helveticæ. There are 8 principal springs.—The negotiations for peace between France and the empire, which had been opened at Rastadt, were brought to a close here Sept. 7, 1714.

Baffa, or Baffo, s-p. Cyprus, on W. coast, near the place where New Paphos stood; 62 WSW. Nicotia. Lon. 32. 35. E. Lat. 34. 56. N. Paphos was anciently the most distinguished city of Cyprus, and is said to have once contained 365 chh., only 4 or 5 of which now remain, these, together with 20 or 30 miserable huts scattered among ruins, and some gardens, are all the remains of the city. It is the residence of an aga, and is on a rocky eminence, in a narrow plain on the sea, which is separated from the great plain by some low rocky cliffs, which might anciently be washed by the sea, before New Paphos was built. These cliffs are now full of sepulchral grottoes, which doubtless were made for the use of the city.

This city is famous in sacred history, for being honoured with the presence of St. Paul; and on account of his having here converted Sergius, the governor of the island, to Christianity. There was anciently at New Paphos a celebrated meeting once a year for the worship of Venus.

Bagdad, or Arabian Irak, or Irak Arabi, (an. Babylonia and Chaldea,) pachalic, A. Turkey, a great part of it included between the Euphrates and Tigris. Its extent and boundaries are indefinite; in its most extensive sense it includes the pachalic of Mosul, and is 840 miles long, and 630 broad. In a more limited sense it is about 450 miles long and 350 broad. Sq. m. about 85,000. Pop. estimated at upwards of 1,000,000. It has Curdistan N., Persia

E., Arabia SW., and the desert of Al-Gezira, or the pachalics of Ourfa and Mosul NW. Chief cities, Bagdad and Bassora. Many parts of it consist of fine fertile land, watered by the Euphrates and Tigris, and their tributary streams; but a great portion is barren. It is subject to Turkey, but its political condition is extremely unsettled; and the husbandman is exposed to have the fruits of his labour torn from him by lawless banditti.

Bagdad, city, A. Turkey, capital of the above pachalic, on both sides of the Tigris, but chiefly on the eastern bank; 210 S. by E. Mosul, 300 NNW. Bassora, 1,350 E. Constantinople. Lon. 44. 25. E. Lat. 33. 20. N. Pop. variously estimated by different travellers at different times; by Tavernier in 1652, at only 15,000; others more recently at 60, 80, and 90,000; an English officer in 1797, at 100,000; Heude in 1817, at 200,000. Hassel and Malte-Brun state it 80,000; 50,000 Arabs, 25,000 Turks, 2,500 Jews, and 1,500 Christians.

It is of an oblong form, about 1,500 paces in length by 800 in breadth; surrounded by a high brick wall, 4 or 5 miles, or according to Heude, 7 miles in circuit. The houses are generally of brick, mostly of only one story, very seldom of more than two; having no windows towards the streets. The houses of the wealthy are handsome, having windows of Venetian glass, with ornamented ceilings. The streets are unpaved and dirty, and so narrow that 2 horsemen can scarcely pass each other abreast. There are few ancient edifices, and the city, notwithstanding its celebrity, is rather meanly built, much inferior to many others in the east. It is still however a place of great wealth and trade, and a noted emporium for the products of Arabia, India, and Persia, as well as for many European manufactures. The bazars consist of a magnificent display of 1,200 shops, where every description of eastern merchandize may be found. Its principal manufactures are red and yellow leather, much esteemed; also silk, cotton, and woollen stuffs. It supplies all Asia Minor, Syria, and part of Europe, with Indian commodities, which are imported at Bassora, transported up the Tigris in boats to Bagdad, thence in caravans to Tocat, Constantinople, Aleppo, Damascus, &c. There is a great resort of passengers hither, either for purposes of commerce, or to visit the tombs of saints, among which is that of the prophet Ezekiel. The baths and coffee houses are well frequented. The climate is agreeable and generally healthy, but extremely hot in summer.

Bagdad is called by the Greeks Irenopolis, and is supposed to have been built on the site of ancient Selucia. It was founded by the caliph Abu Jaafar Almansor, in 766, and it continued the seat of the caliphs, and the capital of the Moslem empire about 500 years. In the 9th century, the famous Al Raschid reigned here, and under the auspices of his queen Zobeida and the vizier Jaffer Barmakead, so celebrated in eastern story, it rose to splendour and renown; and it became one of the largest and most magnificent cities in the world, and is said to have contained 2,000,000 inhabitants. In 1258 it was taken by Hulaku, the grandson of Jenghis Khan, who abolished the caliphate. In 1638 it was besieged by the Turkish emperor, Amurath IV., with an army of 300,000 men, and after capitulation the city was given up to plunder, and a great proportion of the inhabitants were put to the sword. From this period it has greatly declined in extent and magnificence.

Bahamas, or Lucaya Islands, in the Atlantic near E. coast of N. A. One of which was the first land discovered by Columbus, on the island called by the Indians Guanahani; Columbus gave it the name of St. Salvador. There are a great number of these islands; some say 500, but many of them are mere rocks, and others, on account of the difficulty of the navigation, little known. The principal are Bahama, Eleuthera, Abaco, Yuma or Exuma, Providence, Guanahani. They are in general fertile, with a soil similar to South Carolina. Lon. 73. to 81. W. Lat. 22. to 27. N. These islands, in 1773, contained 2,052 whites, and 2,241 blacks; and in 1803, 14,318, including 11,395 blacks and people of colour.—The Moravians have 4 missionaries in these islands.

Bahr el Abiad, i. e. the White River, r. Africa, which from the length of its course as well as the magnitude of its stream, seems justly entitled to the long disputed honour of being considered as the head of the Egyptian Nile. It rises from the mountains of the Moon, several hundred miles S. of Dar-Fur, and unites with the Abyssinian branch in Lat. 16. N. See Nile.

Bahr el Azrek, or Blue River, the Abyssinian branch of the Nile, which rises from two fountains, near Geesh, in the country of Agows, whence it flows into lake Dembea. Emerging from the lake, it sweeps in nearly a semicircular course round the province of Damot and Gojam; then flows in a northerly direction through Sennaar, till at Wed Holgela, in Lat. 16. N. it unites with the Bahr el Abiad. After passing lake Dembea the river has a cataract at Alata, where it is precipitated from the height of above 40 feet. This river is considered by Bruce and others as the head of the Egyptian Nile.

Baikal, lake, or inland sea, Siberia; 360 miles long from SW. to NE., and from 20 to 53 in breadth, interspersed with islands. Lon. 104. to 110. E. Lat. 51. 20. to 55. 20. N. It contains a great many fish, particularly sturgeons, pikes, and sea-dogs. In the environs are several sulphurous springs, and in one part, near the mouth of the river Barguzin, it discharges a kind of pitch which the inhabitants purify. The water is sweet, transparent, and appears at a distance green like the sea. It receives the waters of the Upper Angara, Selinga, Barguzin, and other rivers, but the Lower Angara is the only one by which it seems to discharge its waters.

Nothing can be conceived more interesting and magnificent than this lake. Those who have visited it, seem at a loss for language adequate to describe the feelings which it excites, when first beheld. It is enclosed by rugged mountains, and the sublime scenery around strikes every beholder with astonishment and awe. At some seasons it is so agitated by violent storms, that in the tremendous roaring of its billows, it equals the mighty ocean, while at others, the clearness of its unruffled bosom emulates the lustre of the finest mirror.

Bairout, or Bayreuth, (an. Berytus, and Colonia Felix Julia,) s-p. Syria, in the pachalic of Acre. Lon. 35. 32. E. Lat. 33. 45. N. Pop. variously stated at 7, 8, and 10,000; of whom 3,000 are Turks, the rest Druses, Maronites, Greek schismatics, and Arabs. This city was anciently a place of study, more especially of the civil law. It is situated over the sea, on a gentle rising ground, on N. side of a broad promontory. The gardens on the hanging ground over it, have a beautiful appearance.

The port of Bairout is choaked up with sands and ruins. The town is surrounded by a wall, the soft and sandy stone of which may be pierced by a cannon-ball without breaking or crumbling. It is the emporium to which the Druses and Maronites send their products; it has been considered the chief town of the Druses, though a Turkish garrison is maintained in it.

Scamachie. Lon. 59. E. Lat. 40. 20. N. Pop. about 8,000. Here ships can lie moored head and stern, with their heads to the sea, 40 fathoms off the shore, within the command of two strong bastions, as also by the side of the wall of the northermost bastion. It is defended by a double wall, of which the inmost is lofty, for a Persian fortification. It has also a ditch and redoubts, which last constitute the greatest part of its strength. As all the country here is impregnated with salt and sulphur, the water, though esteemed wholesome, is very unpleasant. The neighbourhood of this city supplies Ghilan and Mazanderan, and other countries contiguous, with rock-salt, brimstone, and naphtha. It is the only place near the Caspian Sea that produces saffron, for which it is famous.

What is commonly called the everlasting fire, near Baku, before which the Guebres offer their supplications, is a phenomenon of a very extraordinary nature, in some measure peculiar to this country. This object of devotion to the Guebres, lies about 10 NE. by E. Baku, on dry, rocky land. There are several ancient temples built with stone, supposed to have been dedicated to fire; most of them are arched vaults, not above 10 or 15 feet high. Amongst others there is a temple in which the Indians now worship: near the altar is a large hollow cane, about 3 feet high, from the end of which issues a blue flame, in colour and gentleness not unlike a lamp that burns with spirits, but seemingly more pure. These Indians affirm, that this flame has continued ever since the flood, and they believe that it will last to the end of the world; and that if it was resisted or suppressed in that place, it would rise in some other. Here are generally 40 or 50 of these poor devotees, who come on a pilgrimage from their own country.

The earth round this place, for above two miles, has this surprising property, that by taking up 2 or 3 inches of the surface, and applying a live coal to the part which is so uncovered, it immediately takes fire, almost before the coal touches the earth: the flame makes the soil hot, but does not consume it, nor affect what is near it with any degree of heat. Any quantity of this earth carried to another part, does not produce this effect.—This town is now in the possession of the Russians, by whom it was taken in 1801.

Balbeck, (an. Heliopolis.) t. A. Turkey, in Syria, at the foot of the Anti-Libanus; 40 NNW. Damascus, 110 S. Aleppo. Lon. 36. 11. E. Lat. 34. 1. N. It is celebrated for its magnificent ruins. The town is surrounded by a wall 4 miles in circuit. There are now to be seen large remains of one of the most beautiful temples in the world, supposed to have been dedicated to the worship of the sun; both the ancient and present names of the place, signify the City of the Sun; but by whom or when built, is not accurately determined. 54 lofty columns appear to have stood in one part of the temple, of which only 6 now remain; the shaft of each is 54 feet long by nearly 22 in circumference, and the total height, including the pedestal and capital, is 72. In the time of Augustus, it was a garrison town of the Romans; and the present temple is said to have been built by Antoninus Pius, instead of the ancient one gone to decay. The inhabitants were computed at 5,000 in 1751, who, in 1784, were reduced to less than 1,200; poor and indolent, cultivating a little cotton, maize, and water-melons, for their subsistence.

Bâle, Basle, Basil, or Easel, canton, Switz., bounded N. by Baden, E. by Argow, S. by Solothurne, and W. by France. Sq. m. 237. Pop. 37,200. It has 3 towns, 29 parishes, and is of the reformed religion, and sends 3 representatives to Swiss diet. The climate is temperate and salubrious; the country hilly, but fruitful; the productions hemp, corn, wine, flax, tobacco, fruit, &c. Manufactures are numerous, particularly for silk, cotton, ribbons, and paper.

Bâle, or Basil, (an. Basilia.) city, Switz., capital of the above canton; 45 N. Berne, 48 WNW. Zurich. Lon. 7. 31. E. Lat. 47. 34. N. Pop. 15,060. H. 2,120. It is built on both sides of the Rhine, which divides it into two unequal parts, called greater and less towns, united by a bridge 600 feet in length; both parts are defended by a wall and a ditch; and to the larger are annexed 5 fauxburgs. The city contains 220 streets, a cathedral, 12 churches, a lyceum, and a university, founded in 1459, having an excellent library, a cabinet of medals, and a botanic garden. The houses are well built, but thinly peopled, the town being much less populous than formerly. The commerce is considerable, and the manufacture of silk ribbons extensive. Other manufactures are silk stuffs, cotton, paper, linen, and gloves; with considerable bleachfields and dye-houses.

The cathedral, a fine Gothic building, contains the tomb of Erasmus.—Natives, Æcolampadius, Grynæus, Buxtorf, Wetstein, Holbein, Hermann, the Bernoullis, and Euler.—It was formerly remarked as a singularity in the clocks of this town, that they always struck an hour sooner than elsewhere.—A famous ecclesiastical council was held here from 1431 to 1444.

Baltic, (an. Venedicus, and Codanus Sinus, and Mare Suevicum.) inland sea, in NW. part of Europe, formed by the coasts of Sweden, Russia, Courland, Prussia, Germany and Denmark. There are a great number of islands in this sea. The length from SW. to NE. is rather more than 600 miles; and its breadth between Sweden and Germany, about 75 miles, but in some places 150. Sq. m. 120,000. The general passage for vessels from the North Sea into the Baltic is through the Sound, a narrow passage between the coast of Sweden and the island of Zealand; there are two other passages, less frequented, the Great and Little Belt. At each a toll is paid by vessels to the king of Denmark, for the purpose of maintaining a lighthouse. Several large rivers empty themselves into the Baltic, as the Dwina, the Oder, the Vistula, the Rega, the Persante, the Nieman, &c., which give a degree of freshness to the water, and probably make it more liable to be frozen, which it generally is for 3 months in the winter, so as completely to hinder its navigation. It is observed that a current always runs from this sea through the Sound to the Atlantic.

Baltimore, city and port of entry, Baltimore co. Md., on N. side of the Patapsco, 14 miles above its entrance into Chesapeake bay; 37 NE. Washington, 70 SSE. Lancaster, 100 SW. Philadelphia, 160 NE. Richmond, 190 SW. N. York, 230 ESE. Pittsburg, 580 NNE. Charleston. Lon. 76. 36. W. Lat. 39. 17. N. Pop. in 1790, 13,758; in 1800, 23,971; in 1810, 46,556; of whom 10,343 were blacks; in 1820, 62,738.

Baltimore has had a remarkably rapid growth. In 1765 it contained only about 50 houses. It was first erected into a city in 1797, and is now the third in size in the United States. It is admirably situated for commerce, and is a place of great wealth and trade. It possesses most of the trade of Maryland, a great part of that of the back country of Pennsylvania, and a portion of that of the western states. The shipping owned here in 1790, amounted to only 13,564 tons; in 1816, to 101,960 tons; in 1820, to 68,674 tons. The number of vessels which arrived here, in 1816, from foreign ports was 533; the number coastwise 401.

Baltimore, as laid out, is four miles square, and it is divided into twelve wards. It is built around a basin, which affords a spacious, secure, and commodious harbour, having at common tides eight or nine feet of water. The principal part of the city is divided from the portions styled Old Town and Fell's Point, by a small river, called Jones' Falls, over which are erected three elegant stone bridges, and 4 wooden ones. Vessels of 500 or 600 tons can lie at the wharves at this Point in perfect safety; but those of only 200 tons can come up to the town. The mouth of the harbour is a narrow strait, and is effectually commanded by Fort M'Henry, which secures the city against a naval force. The situation of a part of the town is low, and it was formerly accounted unhealthy; but the various improvements which have been made, particularly the filling up of low and marshy grounds, have rendered it healthy. It is supplied with excellent water from four public fountains, which are fitted up in an ornamental style.

Baltimore contains a court-house, a penitentiary, a jail, an alms-house, a hospital, a theatre, a circus, an exchange, a museum and gallery of paintings, 5 market houses, 10 banks, including a branch of the United States bank, a library of about 10,000 volumes, and 38 houses of public worship, 5 for Roman Catholics, 5 for Episcopalians, 5 for Methodists, 4 for Baptists, 3 for Presbyterians, 3 for Africans, 2 for Dutch Reformed, 2 for Seceders, 2 for Friends, 1 for Lutherans, 1 for Unitarians, 1 for Independents, 1 for Dunkers, and a New Jerusalem church.

The exchange is an immense edifice, 366 feet by 140, somewhat resembling an H, having 4 wings; one for the United States branch bank, one for the custom house, and one for a coffee house. The Roman Catholic cathedral and the Unitarian church are very conspicuous and magnificent edifices. St. Paul's church, the court house, and the Union Bank are all spacious and elegant. Several of the other public buildings are large and handsome. The penitentiary is a large building, and contained in 1817, 242 prisoners. The institution is under excellent management. The hospital, on an elevated situation, has an extensive and valuable anatomical museum, and usually from 120 to 150 patients.

The Washington Monument, a superb structure of stone, is situated on an elevation just above the compact part of the city. The base is 50 feet square, and 23 high, on which is placed another square of about half the extent and elevation. On this is a column 20 feet in diameter at the base, and 14 at the top. The statue of Washington is to be placed on the summit, 163 feet from the ground.

The city is generally well built, mostly of brick. Many of the houses, particularly of those recently erected, display much elegance and taste. The streets are well paved, and many of them are spacious. The principal street, called Baltimore, or Market Street, is about a mile long, and about 80 feet wide, and runs nearly east and west, parallel with the water; and it is intersected at right angles, like those in Philadelphia. North and east of the city, the land rises to a considerable elevation, and affords a fine and variegated prospect. The town, the point, the shipping, both in the bay and at Fell's point, the bay as far as the eye can reach, rising ground on the right and left of the harbour, a fine grove of trees on the declivity at the right, and a stream of water breaking over the rocks at the hill on the left, all conspire to complete the beauty and grandeur of the scene.

The literary institutions of Baltimore are a Medical College, St. Mary's College, and Baltimore College. There are several Lancasterian and Sunday schools; and numerous private schools are well supported.

The Medical College was founded in 1807. In 1812, the institution received a new charter, and was styled the University of Maryland, and was authorized to annex three other faculties, of languages, arts, and sciences, of law, and divinity. These are expected soon to go into operation. The medical department, the only one hitherto in operation, is highly respectable and flourishing, and has a valuable medical library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, and an anatomical museum. The building is spacious and elegant. The officers are a provost, and 6 professors, of anatomy, theory and practice of medicine, chemistry, materia medica, obstetrics, and the institutes of medicine. The number of students, in 1821, was 238.

St. Mary's College was incorporated as a university in 1806, and is well endowed. The buildings are neatly built of brick. It has a good library, a philosophical, and a chemical apparatus. Its officers are a president, a professor of divinity, one of moral and one of natural philosophy, one of belles lettres, 4 of the languages and mathematics, and 8 assistant tutors. The students, about 140 in number, between the ages of 7 and 19, study in presence of their instructors. A seminary for students preparing for the priesthood is connected with the college.

The Baltimore College is an incorporated institution, but has no funds. The building is a neat edifice of brick, 60 feet by 40. It has 2 instructors, and about 60 students, from 7 to 15 years of age.

Six newspapers are published here, 5 daily, 1 and weekly. Among the manufacturing establishments are 2 steam flour mills, a glass-house, a cotton manufactory, several establishments for the manufacture of Prussian blue, white lead, and vitriol; also distilleries of gin and whiskey. The importance of Baltimore is increased by the advantages for mills and other water works in its vicinity. There were, in 1805, within 18 miles of the city, 50 merchant flour mills, 2 paper mills, 1 powder mill, 2 forges, and several furnaces. Twelve of the flour mills are on Jones' Falls, within 4 miles of the city. At these mills are manufactured great quantities of excellent flour.

A formidable attack was made on this city during the late war, on the 13th and 14th of September 1814, by the British, under general Ross. On the 13th the battle at North Point was fought; and on the 14th Fort M'Henry was bombarded. The enemy was repulsed, and general Ross slain. An elegant structure of marble, about 35 feet high, called the Battle Monument, has been erected in a square in the city, commemorative of this event. On the column are inscribed the names of those, who fell in defence of the city.

It is traversed from west to east by the Niger, and is generally very fertile. The inhabitants are a mixture of Moors and Negroes. Among the towns are Sego, the capital, Jenne, and Sansanding.

Bambere, t. Hind., in Candeish; 60. E. Surat.

Bamberg, formerly a bishopric and principality, Ger., in Franconia; bounded N. by Coburg and the Vogtland, E. by Bayreuth and the estates of Nuremberg, S. by the estates of Nuremberg and the principality of Schwartzenberg, and W. by the bishopric of Wurtzburg; about 60 miles in length, and 40 in breadth. The soil is fertile, producing grain and fruit in abundance, saffron, and liquorice; and near the city of Bamberg, in particular, figs, lemons and oranges; the inhabitants raise a great number of cattle. The principal towns are Bamberg, Forcheim, Embermanstadt, Weischenfeld, Kupferberg, Lichtenfelds, and Vilseck. The inhabitants are Roman Catholics. Pop. 207,000. Sq. m. 1,430. In 1803, this bishopric was secularised, and given as an indemnity to the Elector of Bavaria, and it now forms the most of the circle of the Upper Maine, and a part of that of the Rezat, in the kingdom of Bavaria.

Bamberg, formerly Babenberg and Pfaffenberg, (an. Bergium, and Bamberberga, and Garrinarion,) city, Bavaria, capital of the circle of the Upper Maine; 30 NNW. Nuremberg, 110 E. Mentz. Lon. 10. 35. E. Lat. 49. 36. N. Pop. 16,397. Abp. see. It contains 2,030 houses, 22 churches, a cathedral, which is a Gothic edifice, a splendid palace, once the seat of episcopal magnificence, a cabinet of natural history, a gymnasium, a lyceum, and a library which contains 62,000 printed volumes and 1,000 MSS. The city is pleasantly situated on a vast and fertile plain. It has considerable trade, and 2 large yearly fairs; it is a great thoroughfare, and its public buildings are very magnificent. The rivers Pegnitz and Regnitz run through it, and after forming several islands, fall together into the Maine about 3 miles below. It has no fortification, but a wall.

Bamborough, v. Eng., in Northumberland, near the coast of the German Ocean, with a castle; 4 E. Bedford, 324 N. London. Pop. 329.

Bambouch, or Bambych, (an. Hierapolis, and Bambyce, and Magog,) t. Syria, about 5 miles from the Euphrates. It is situated at S. end of a long vale.

The form of the city was irregular; some part of the walls, which remain entire, are about 9 feet thick, 30 high, and about 2 miles in circ. There is a walk all round on the top of the walls, to which there is an ascent by a flight of steps, which are built on arches. The wall is defended by towers on 5 sides, at the distance of 50 paces from each other; and there is a low fosse without.

About 200 paces within the last gate there is a mound of earth, on which probably stood the temple of the Syrian goddess Atargatis, thought to be the same as Ashteroth of the Sidonians, and Cybele of the Romans, for whose worship this place was famous. Dr. Pocock conjectured it to be about 200 feet in front.

Bambouk, t. Africa, and cap. of a kingdom, between the Fatemi and Senegal rivers. Lon. 9. 30. W. Lat. 13. 25. N. The country is situated between 12. 30. and 14. 15. N. Lat.; about 36 leagues from N. to S., and 28 in breadth, and said to contain about 60,000 inhabitants. It is composed chiefly of lofty, naked, and barren mountains, and its wealth consists entirely in its mineral productions. These are gold, (which is abundant,) silver, iron, tin, lead, and load-stone. The most remarkable animals are a species of apes, whiter than the whitest European rabbits, which they will not allow to be sent out of the country; white foxes; the girafa, described as an animal as high, but not so large as an elephant, made more like a camel, of extraordinary swiftness.

Bambukalasi, (an. Hierapolis,) t. A. Turkey, in Natolia; 12 N. Dagnizlu. Its present name signifies the castle of cotton, from the whiteness of the surrounding rocks.

It is pleasantly situated at the side of a hill on S. side of the Frith of Murray, at the mouth of the river Devron. The harbour is neither large nor good, stopped often by the shifting of the sands after storms. The castle was formerly a place of strength, and a royal palace. There is a weekly market on Friday.

Bamffshire, or Banffshire, maritime county, Scot., bounded N. by the Frith of Murray, E. and S. by Aberdeenshire, W. by Murrayshire and Invernesshire; about 45 miles in length, and 16 in its mean breadth.

Bamffshire is subdivided into the districts of Strathdevron, Euzie, Boyne, Balveny, Strathela, and Strathaven. The principal rivers are the Spey and the Devron; and the principal towns Bamff, Frazerberg, Turreff, Cullen, and Fochabers. Pop. 36,668. Families 8,612; 3,815 employed in agriculture; 2,195 in trade and manufactures; 2,602 otherwise. Sq. m. 622.

Bamian, or Bamigan, (an. Drapsaca, or Darapsa,) city, Cabulistan, in Balk, on N. side of the Hindookoo mountains, in the road from Balk to Chizni and Lahore; about 20 miles from Alexandria, where Alexander left 7,000 veterans under the command of Proexas, a noble Persian; 100 W. Cabul, 170 SSE. Balk. Lon. 66. 50. E. Lat. 34. 35. N.

It is styled the Thebes of the east, and is a place of great antiquity. At an early period, it was regarded as the metropolis of the sect of Buddha, and is represented by them as the source of purity and holiness. The city consists of 12,000 recesses or apartments, cut out of the rock. Some of these, from their extraordinary dimensions, seem to have been designed for temples.

Two colossal statues, 50 cubits high, adhering to the mountain out of which they are cut, are to be seen in the city at a distance, and are regarded as objects of great curiosity.

Banda Islands, group of islands, belonging to Netherlands, in the Eastern Sea, lying E. of the Celebes; so called from Banda, the principal of them. Lon. 130. 37. E. Lat. 4. 12. S. They contain 5,763 inhabitants, though they are said formerly to have contained 15,000. Their chief produce is nutmegs, of which they are competent to supply the want to the rest of the world.

The names of the islands are Banda, or Lantor; Puloway, or Poolaway; Pulo Run, or Poolaron; Neira, Gunong Assi, or Guanapee Rosyngen; Pulo Prampon, Pulo Suanjee Capal, and Nylacky. The inhabitants are in alliance with the Dutch East-India Company.

These islands can never be expected to yield any advantage, besides that derived from the spice trade. Entirely cut off from all other parts of India, and deprived of all commerce, save a trifling bartering with the indigent natives of the south-eastern and south-western islands, they are even destitute of the means of subsistence for their own inhabitants, and must be supplied with every necessary from abroad. Nature has lavishly bestowed upon them articles of luxury, but has denied them those of indispensable necessity. Banda is likewise accounted a most unhealthy place, especially at the chief settlement of Neira; some attribute this circumstance to the neighbourhood of the volcano, in the island of Gunong Api, and others to a deleterious quality in the water.

Augusta, 125 NE. Portland, 240 NE. Boston, W. 690. Lon. 68. 45. W. Lat. 44. 45. N. Pop. in 1810, 850; in 1820, 1,221. It contains a court-house, a bank, an athenæum, a printing office, an academy, and a theological seminary. It is a flourishing town, and has a very pleasant situation, remarkably favourable for commerce. The river is navigable as far as the town for vessels of 3, or 400 tons, but freezes in the winter to the distance of 12 miles below. The shipping owned here, in 1816, amounted to 1,710 tons.

The theological seminary, called the Maine Charity School, was incorporated in 1814, and went into operation at Hampden, in 1816; since which it has been removed to this town. It has 2 professors, 1 of classical literature, and 1 of theology, and [1822] 24 students. Young men preparing for the ministry receive tuition free of expense, and the indigent have further assistance. The course of education is completed in 4 years. The requisitions for admission are a knowledge of common arithmetic, English grammar, the first 4 books of Virgil's Æneid, the 4 orations of Cicero against Catiline, and in Greek, the 4 Evangelists. A public exhibition is held on the last Wednesday in August. There are two vacations; the 1st from the exhibition, 4 weeks; the 2d from the first Wednesday in January, 8 weeks.

Bantam, s-p. on NW. coast of Java, and capital of a kingdom; 50 W. Batavia. Lon. 106. 3. E. Lat. 6. 4. N. It is situated in a bay famed formerly for having been in early times the principal rendezvous of the shipping from Europe in the East. It is a town of considerable extent, but is fortified only on the land side. It is built wholly of Bamboo, and stands on the bay of Bantam, near the mouth of a river. The town is now in ruins, but the remains attest its ancient splendour. The sultan has ceased to be an independent prince, and the country is now in the possession of the Netherlands. It was the great mart for pepper and other spices, from whence they were distributed to the rest of the world. The chief factory of the English, as well as the Dutch East-India company, was settled there.

The kingdom of Bantam, which forms the western divisions of Java, is about 400 miles in circ. It has the smallest population of all the divisions of Java. The population has been lately stated at 231,604. The air here is in general very unhealthy, and the mortality often great. All the islands in the straits of Sunda, from Prince's Island to Hog Island, belong to the kingdom of Bantam.

Barbadoes, one of the Caribbees, and the most eastern of the West India islands, supposed to have been discovered by the Portuguese, but belonging to the English; 20 leagues E. St. Vincent, 28 SE. Martinique. Lon. 59. W. Lat. 13. 10. N. It is 21 miles long, and 14 broad, containing 106,470 acres, most of which is under cultivation. It is divided into 11 parishes, and contains 4 towns, viz. Bridgetown, the capital, Speight's Town, Austin's Town, and Jamestown. Pop. in 1786, 16,167 whites, 838 free people of colour, and 62,115 slaves; in 1811, 16,289 whites, 3,392 free people of colour, and 62,258 slaves; total 81,939. Slaves in 1817, 77,273.

The climate is very hot, but the air is pure and moderated by the constant trade winds; but it is subject to dreadful hurricanes. The soil in the low lands is black, somewhat reddish in the shallow parts, on the hills of a chalky marl, and near the sea generally sandy. Of this variety of soil, the black mould is best suited to the cultivation of the cane, and with the aid of manure, has given as great returns of sugar, in favourable seasons, as any in the West Indies, the prime lands of St. Christopher's excepted. The houses of the planters are very numerous all along the country, which with the luxuriant productions of the soil, and the gently swelling hills, form a delightful scene. The average annual exports for 8 years, from 1740 to 1748, were 13,948 hogsheads of sugar of 13 cwt., 12,884 puncheons of rum, of 100 gallons, 60 hogsheads of molasses, 4,667 bags of ginger, 600 bags of cotton, and 327 gourds of aloes. The exports, on an average, in 1784, 1785, and 1786, had fallen to 9,554 hogsheads of sugar, 5,448 puncheons of rum, 6,320 bags of ginger, 8,331 bags of cotton, exclusive of some smaller articles. Value of exports in 1809, £450,760, in 1810, £271,597. Imports in 1809, £288,412, in 1810, £311,400.—The Moravians have 2 missionaries, and the Methodist Society one on this island.

BARBARY, or Barbary States, large country, Africa, bounded N. by the Mediterranean Sea, E. by Egypt and the deserts of Lybia, S. by Sahara or the desert, and W. by the Atlantic Ocean. Its utmost extent, from E. to W. 1,200 miles, and its breadth from N. to S. 320, but the breadth is less or more in different places.

Divisions. The Barbary States consist of Morocco including Fez, Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli.

Climate. The climate is pleasant and temperate, yet the country is subject to destructive ravages by the plague. The thermometer seldom sinks more than 5 degrees below freezing point.

Mountains. The Atlas range forms the most striking feature of the country, extending along the southern frontier of Morocco, Algiers, and Tunis. The most lofty summits are in the western part.

Face of the country, soil, &c. The space intercepted between the Atlas range and the sea, a space from 50 to 200 miles wide, is mostly level, the soil loose and sandy, watered by innumerable streams from the mountains, and displays the most exuberant fertility. Its productions are maize, rice, millet, peas, beans, lentils, and various kinds of excellent fruits. The country lying between the Atlas range and the Great Desert, is mostly sandy and barren, but produces dates in such abundance that it is called Biledulgerid, or the country of dates.

Minerals, &c. Salt, antimony, iron, copper, and silver are found. Salt water is more common than fresh.

Animals. The domestic animals are nearly the same as in Europe. The lion, panther, hyena, and other ferocious animals are very numerous in the mountainous and desert tracts. There is also a great variety of insects, of which the most formidable is the locust, which often appears in immense swarms, and commits the most destructive ravages.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants are divided into 4 classes; 1st, Moors, who are the ruling people, and form the chief inhabitants of all the cities; 2d, Jews, who reside in the cities and have the management of trade; 3d, Arabs, who, with their flocks and herds, occupy the interior and pastoral districts; 4th, the Brebers, who are descended from the ancient natives, and are a strong, athletic race, inhabiting the mountain districts, living in fixed villages, and cultivate the ground. The religion of all these classes, except the Jews, is Mahometanism.

It is said to have been built by the Carthaginian Hamilcar, the father of Hannibal, 250 years before Christ; and is one of the largest, handsomest, and most commercial cities in Spain, and distinguished for the industry of its inhabitants.

It is very favourably situated for foreign commerce, and the amount of its annual trade, outward and inward, is computed at upwards of £1,750,000. It has extensive manufacturing establishments, 30 calico presses, many looms for silk, wool, and cotton, and manufactories of muskets, pistols, swords, hats, laces, ribbons, stockings, and soap.

The town is elegantly built, has 9 parish chh., 34 cloysters, 6 colleges, 6 hospitals, a theatre, and a dock-yard, and contains a number of magnificent public edifices.

It is built in the form of a semicircle, on the bank of the sea, in a large plain, and is divided into Old and New Town, separated from each other by a wall; and the whole defended by thick walls, bastions, horn works, large and lofty ramparts, and deep ditches; with a citadel built on a mountain called Montjoui; it is however too extensive to be easily guarded and defended, on which account it has always been taken when attacked.

The harbour is spacious, commodious, and always full of vessels, but is sometimes dangerous; it daily fills up, and requires continual care, and an immense expense, to keep the entrance open.—In 1821, about 20,000 of the inhabitants of this city were carried off by the yellow fever.

Barletta, s-p. Naples, in Bari, on the Adriatic; 4 W. Trani. Lon. 16. 20. E. Lat. 41. 19. N. Pop. 15,925. This town has from without a ruinous aspect; its walls tumbling down, and its ditches filled with rubbish. But the inside of the city is magnificently built, though thinly peopled; it conveys the idea of a capital of some mighty state, reduced to the condition of a conquered province, or depopulated by a raging pestilence. Its streets are wide and well paved; the houses large and lofty, built with hewn stone, which from age has acquired a polish little inferior to that of marble. The exports here are salt, corn, almonds, and liquorice, a root that grows spontaneously in the swamps. The air is accounted unwholesome during the hot months.

Bassora, or Basrah, city, Asia, in the Arabian Irak, situated on an arm of the Shat-ul-Arab, about half way between the junction of the Tigris with the Euphrates and the Persian Gulf; 210 SW. Ispahan, 600 SE. Aleppo. Lon. 47. 30. E. Lat. 30. 31. N. Pop. estimated by Heude, in 1817, at 80,000, by others at 40, 50, and 60,000. The Shat-ul-Arab is formed by the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates, and is navigable for vessels of 500 tons to Bassora, 70 miles. Merchants of Arabia, Turkey, Armenia, and Greece; also Jews and Indians reside here; the English and Dutch have their consuls, and their ships come from India loaded with merchandize. The Arabs have more power than the Turks, and the language of the former is chiefly spoken. The prince pays but little respect to the Ottoman court.

The city is surrounded by a wall about 10 miles in circuit, from 20 to 25 feet thick. The houses are generally mean, being constructed of clay, with a small proportion of bricks; and the bazars, though containing the richest products of the east, are but miserable edifices. Almost all the inhabitants of the city are connected with trade, and its commerce is extensive, as it is the grand emporium for all the produce of India sent to the Turkish empire. The trade of the interior is conducted by means of caravans to Aleppo and Bagdad. The town is unhealthy, the environs fertile. As to religion, besides Mahometans, there are Syrian Jacobites and Nestorians, and monks from Europe; there are besides some modern Sabeans, whom they call disciples of John.

Batavia, city and s-p. Java, on N. coast of the island, near the west end, capital of all the Dutch or Netherland East Indies. Lon. 106. 54. E. Lat. 6. 12. S. Pop. about 1780, estimated at 160,000; in 1795, including a circuit of 10 miles, 116,000; and in 1816, the population of the city was reduced to 47,217; of whom 14,239 were slaves, 11,854 Chinese, 7,720 Balinese, 4,115 natives of Celebes, 3,331 Javanese, 3,155 Malays, 2,028 Europeans and their descendants. It was founded by the Dutch in 1619; taken by the British in 1811, but restored to the Dutch in 1816. It is situated on a wide deep bay, in which are interspersed many low green islets, within which shipping finds safe anchorage. It is rather a roadstead than a harbour, but from its westerly situation and easy access, is the best and most convenient port in the island. The greatest inconvenience is the bar at the mouth, which at low water is almost dry, and seldom has 6 feet water. The town is situated in a low marshy plain, at the union of small rivers, which are navigable for boats; and in many of the streets are canals filled with water almost stagnant. The miasmata generated in the putrid mud banks and canals, render the town exceedingly unhealthy, and subject to a remittent fever, very mortal to strangers.

Batavia, on account of the beauty of its buildings and immense trade, has been styled the Queen of the East. But within a few years the town has lost a great part of its splendour. Streets have been pulled down, canals half filled up, forts demolished, and palaces levelled with the dust. The campongs or quarters of the native population, are of mean appearance. In the part inhabited by Europeans the streets are more regular, and the houses spacious, but not elegant. The public edifices are neither numerous nor splendid. The principal are the stadt-house, a Calvinist, a Lutheran, and a Portuguese church, several Mahometan mosques and some Chinese temples. There are also some charitable institutions.

Batavian Republic, the name adopted by the Seven United States, soon after the French Revolution; and acknowledged by the powers of Europe. The whole republic was declared one and indivisible; all members of society were declared equal in the eye of the law, without respect to rank or birth; all religious societies, acknowledging a Supreme Being, equally protected by law. Feudality was abolished; all fiefs declared allodial, and possessors of lordships to be indemnified. In 1806, the form of government was changed into a kingdom, under the name of Holland; and in 1815 these provinces were united with Belgium to form the kingdom of Netherlands.

It is the favourite residence of the Bramins of Napaul, and contains many ancient Sanscrit manuscripts. Its palace and buildings, in general, have a striking appearance, and are built of excellent brick.

Bath, p-t. Grafton co. N.H., on the Connecticut; 14 N. Haverhill, 40 N. Dartmouth College, W. 545. Pop. in 1810, 1,316; in 1820, 1,498. The Lower Ammonoosuck and Bath turnpike pass through this town, and at the point where they intersect there is a handsome village.

Bath, p-t. and port of entry, in Lincoln co. Maine, on W. side of the Kennebeck, 12 miles from the sea; 13 SW. Wiscasset, 35 NE. Portland, 150 NE. Boston, W. 588. Lon. 69. 49. W. Lat. 43. 55. N. Pop. in 1810, 2,491; in 1820, 3,026. Bath is pleasantly situated and has great advantages for commerce, being at the head of winter navigation. The river here is seldom frozen over. It is one of the most considerable commercial towns in Maine, and does considerable business at ship-building. The shipping entered at this port, in 1820, amounted to 21,612 tons. It contains an academy, 2 banks, and 3 houses of public worship; 2 for congregationalists, and 1 for baptists.

Bath, city, Eng., in Somersetshire; 12 E. Bristol, 19 NE. Wells, 39 NW. Salisbury, 41 SW. Gloucester, 67 SW. Oxford, 107 W. London. Lon. 2. 22. W. Lat. 51. 23. N. Pop. including the suburbs, 38,434; 15,275 males, and 23,159 females. Bp. see united with Wells. It is beautifully situated on the Avon, in a narrow valley, bounded on the NE. and SW. by hills, and widening on the NW. into rich and extensive meadows. The Avon is navigable from Bath to Bristol. It has borne various names in different ages, all having allusion to its celebrated waters. The Romans called it Aquæ Solis, Fontes Calidi, Thermæ, Bodonia, and Bathonia; the Britons Caer Badun, or Bladon; the Saxons Hat Bathun and Achamannum. The vestiges of the Romans here are still exceedingly numerous, which show the high value which they placed upon the waters.

Bath is remarkable for medicinal waters, for its various sources of amusement, for the elegance of its streets, and the magnificence of its public buildings. It is accounted the most elegant city in England. The houses are of superior construction, built of freestone, obtained from the hills about the town. The cathedral is in the form of a cross, and is the purest specimen of Gothic architecture in the kingdom. There are 3 churches and 1 chapel within the city, and without the boundaries 3 churches and 7 chapels; also places of public worship for Methodists, Independents, Baptists, Moravians, Catholics, Unitarians, and Quakers. It contains the general hospital for the reception of invalids, who desire the benefit of the waters, from all parts of the world, several other hospitals and charitable institutions; the Bath and West of England society, the philosophical society, public grammar school, &c.

There are 5 public baths, viz. King's and Queen's Bath, Cross Bath, Hot Bath, and New Private Bath. The temperature of the different springs varies from 93 to 117 degrees. They contain carbonic acid, azotic gas, muriate and sulphate of soda, carbonate and sulphate of lime, with a very small quantity of silex and oxycarbonate of iron. They are found of great efficacy in cases of gout, rheumatism, indigestion, palsy, and biliary obstructions. The population of Bath varies greatly at different seasons. It affords a great variety of amusements, and is equally the resort of valetudinarians and votaries of pleasure.

Bavaria, one of the late 9 circles, Ger., bounded N. by Franconia and Bohemia, E. and S. by the circle of Austria, and W. by Swabia; containing 16,588 sq. m. with 1,300,000 inh. It received its name from the duchy of Bavaria, which formed the greater part. It was composed of twenty states, divided into two benches, the one ecclesiastical and the other secular. These states were convoked by the duke of Bavaria, and the archbishop of Saltzburg, who directed alternately. The assemblies were held at Ratisbon and Wasserburg. When the army of the empire was 40,000, this circle furnished 800 horsemen, and 1,494 foot, as its contingent.

Bavaria, electorate and duchy, Ger., formerly constituting the greater part of the above circle, now forming a part of the kingdom of Bavaria; 180 miles long, and 120 broad, and is divided into Upper and Lower Bavaria, and Upper Palatinate. Towards the S. the country is mountainous, intersected with forests, lakes, and morasses, with pasture grounds, but few cornfields; towards the N. are found large and fertile plains, which produce plenty of corn; there are likewise many salt-works, medicinal springs, and baths; mines of copper, silver, and lead; quarries of excellent marble; plenty of game, fish, and cattle. The principal rivers, the Danube, Larch, Inn, Altmuhl, Nab, and Iser.

This country, which by the Germans is called Bayern, is part of the Rætia Vindelicia and Noricum of the ancients; and took the Latin name of Boiaria, from the Boii.

BAVARIA, km. erected in 1805, and now one of the most considerable of the secondary states in Europe; composed of the most of the circles of Bavaria and Franconia, part of Swabia, and on the west side of the Rhine, the most of that part of the circle of Upper-Rhine included in the late French department of Mont Tonnere. Exclusive of the part west of the Rhine, it is bounded N. by Hesse Darmstadt, Hesse Cassel, and the Saxon principalities of Meiningen, Hildburghausen, Coburg, and Reuss, and the kingdom of Saxony, E. and S. by Austria, and W. by Wurtemberg, Baden, and Hesse Darmstadt.

Divisions. Bavaria is divided into the 8 following circles. The circle of the Rhine lies on the west side of the river Rhine.

Circles.	Sq. m.	Pop.	Chief Towns.
Iser.....	5,772.....	503,033.....	Munich.

Rhine.....	1,808.....	308,000.....	Spire.

Population. According to the official statement in 1818, 3,560,000.

Towns. Munich is the capital. Nuremberg and Augsburg are great trading towns. The other most considerable towns, exclusive of those already enumerated, are Aichstadt, Amberg, Aschaffenburg, Bayreuth, Deux Ponts, Erlangen, Ingolstadt, Kempten, Landshut, Landau, Memmingen, Nordlingen, Schweinfurt, and Straubing.

Education. Much has been done of late for improving education, and diffusing literature. There are 3 universities, those of Erlangen, Landshut, and Wurzburg. There are a number of gymnasia, academies, and public libraries.

Government. Bavaria, since 1818, has been a constitutional monarchy. The parliament consists of 2 houses. The first is composed of the princes of the royal family, the great officers of state, the 2 archbishops, 1 bishop, the president of the protestant consistory, and the mediatised nobles. These are called the councillors of the realm. The second house is composed of deputies from the body of the people, in the ratio of 1 to 7,000 families.

Revenue. The revenue is stated at £1,800,000 sterling.

Army. The army including the staff, amounts to between 40, and 50,000.

Religion. The established religion is the Roman Catholic, with 2 archbishoprics, Munich and Bamberg; and 6 bishoprics, Augsburg, Passau, Ratisbon, Wurzburg, Aichstadt, and Spire. Number of Lutherans 800,000; Calvinists 5,000; Jews 16,000. All sects have free toleration.

Rivers. The rivers are the Danube, Inn, Iser, Regen, Lech, Iller, Altmühl, Nab, Maine, and Rhine.

Face of the country. On the south, Bavaria is separated from Tyrol, by rugged mountains, and on the northeast there is another range between Bavaria and Bohemia. The rest of the country is generally level or moderately uneven.

Soil and productions. Much of the soil is fruitful, producing sufficient quantities of the necessaries of life. The productions are grain, fruits, rapeseed, flax, hemp, tobacco, hops, and wine.—The climate is temperate and healthy.

Cathedral 1, churches 6. Bp. see. It is the seat of a tribunal, in the district of Ustaritz, and department of Lower-Pyrenees; situated at the conflux of the rivers Adour and Nive, about 3 miles from the sea, with a good harbour, but difficult to enter. It is strongly fortified, the work of the celebrated Vauban. The town is large, well built, commercial, and opulent. Masts are brought from the Pyrenees, by means of the Nive, the Gave of Oleron, and the Adour, to Bayonne, and thence shipped to Brest, and other ports; a company was established here for the northern whale fishery in 1605, and the town is largely concerned in the cod and whale fishery. The hams of Bayonne have been long famous, and its wines and chocolate are exported in great quantities. The language of the common people here is the Basque.

Bedford, (New), p-t. and s-p. Bristol co. Mass.; 26 SSE. Taunton, 52 S. Boston, W. 458. Lon. 70. 54. W. Lat. 41. 38. N. Pop. in 1810, including Fairhaven, 5,651; in 1820, exclusive of Fairhaven, 3,947. Fairhaven, lying opposite to New Bedford, formed a part of this town till 1812. New Bedford is pleasantly situated on W. side of an arm of the sea, which makes up from Buzzard's bay. This arm of the sea may be considered the estuary of Accushnet river, which flows into it, near the town. It contains a bank, an insurance office, 5 houses of public worship; 1 for Friends, 2 for Congregationalists, and 2 for Baptists; and a respectable and flourishing academy for Friends, which has 2 instructors, a library of about 900 volumes, and a small philosophical apparatus.

The harbour is safe and commodious, having a depth of water of from 3 to 4 fathoms. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1820, amounted to 32,240 tons. Being surrounded by a country, which furnishes but few articles of export, the prosperity of the town depends much on the whale fishery. There were, in 1818, employed in this business about 20 vessels of from 200 to 300 tons, and several smaller ones; the whole carrying upwards of 6,000 tons. Forty-five sail of vessels, belonging to the district, were employed in the cod and other fisheries; several trade direct to Europe, the West Indies, and different parts of the United States. The exports to Europe and the West Indies for two years, ending June 30, 1818, averaged $130,000 each; of which sperm and whale oil, sperm candles, fish and fish oil, constituted the greatest part. There are three rope-walks, and ship building is carried on to considerable extent. A weekly newspaper is published here.

Pop. in 1758, 8,549; in 1782, 13,105; in 1798, 18,320; and in 1821, including the suburbs, 35,084. H. 5,754. It is commodiously situated for trade, in a populous and well cultivated country, is connected with Lough Neagh by a canal, and is the principal seaport in the north of Ireland. The bay is a spacious estuary; and has safe anchorage. Vessels drawing 13 feet of water can approach the wharfs at full tide. It is well built, chiefly of brick; the streets broad, straight, well paved, and lighted. It contains 13 houses of public worship, of which 4 are for Presbyterians, 2 for Episcopalians, 2 for Catholics, and 2 for Methodists; 2 hospitals; the Belfast Incorporate Charitable Society; an exchange, a linen hall, insurance offices, banks, a seminary styled New College, &c. Belonging to the port are 58 vessels, carrying 8,335 tons. The principal exports are linen, butter, beef, pork and oatmeal:—total value, in 1810, £2,904,520. The manufactures consist chiefly of linens and cottons; the former employing 723 looms. It sends one member to parliament.

Belgrade, (an. Singidunum and Abba Grecorum,) famous town and fortress, Eu. Turkey, capital of Servia, near the conflux of the Save and Danube; 150 SSE. Buda, 440 NW. Constantinople. Lon. 20. 10. E. Lat. 44. 50. N. Pop. in 1789, stated at 25,000; in 1817, 16,000; mostly Turks. It consists of 4 parts; 1st, the fortress, standing on a steep eminence, in the centre of the whole, commanding the Danube, and inclosed with high walls, strong towers, and a tripple ditch; 2d, the water-side division, lying on the north side, near the junction of the two rivers. This is the best built part, and is surrounded by walls and ditches; 3d, the Rascian town, towards the west; and, 4th, the Palanka, which encircles the fortress on the south and east. The town contains a caravansery, 2 bazars, and 14 mosques. It is advantageously situated for commerce. But its importance as a fortress, and as the key of Hungary, has rendered it an object of fierce contention between the Austrians and Turks.

Benares, pr. Hind., bounded N. by Jionpour, E. by Bahar, S. by Chunar, W. by Allahabad; about 70 miles in length, and 25 in breadth. This country was ceded to the English in 1775, and produces a revenue of about £400,000 a year. The soil is generally fertile, producing grain of all kinds, sugar, indigo, and opium, and the country is very populous.

Benares, (ancient Indian name Cashy, or Baranasi,) city, Hind., and capital of a province of the same name; 120 W. Patna, 435 NW. Calcutta. Lon. 83. 16. E. Lat. 25. 22. N. Pop. in 1803, by enumeration, 582,000; about 1-10th Mahometans. Stone and brick houses, from 1 to 6 stories, upwards of 12,000; mud houses upwards of 16,000. It is the greatest seat or university of Hindoo learning, and has 8,000 houses occupied by Bramins; and during the religious festivals the concourse of people is immense. It is esteemed a holy city by the Hindoos, who conceive that a person dying here is certain of paradise, a notion which tends to increase its population.

It carries on an extensive trade with all parts of India, and is the principal mart of the diamonds found in the mines of Bundelcund. The manufactures are of gold, silver lace, silks, and brocades. The banks of the river are entirely lined with stone, formed into flights of steps, and adorned by numerous temples, in the midst of which rises the superb mosque, built by the emperor Aurungzebe. Benares is the residence of a British court. The Rajah's palace is at Ramnaghur, on the opposite side of the river. The Church and Baptist missionary societies have missionaries here. The Church Missionary society has a printing establishment, and the superintendence of a school endowed by a native Hindoo with £11,000, containing, in 1819, 121 scholars.

Bencoolen, or Benkahule, s-p. Sumatra, on SW. coast. Lon. 102. 11. E. Lat. 3. 50. S. The English settled here in the year 1685, and in 1690, the East India Company built a fort here, calling it Fort York. A convenient river on its NW. side brings the pepper out of the inland country; but there is great inconvenience in shipping it, by reason of a dangerous bar at the river's mouth. The place, which is almost two miles in compass, is known at sea by a high slender mountain, which rises in the country, 20 miles beyond it, called the Sugar-Loaf. It is an inconsiderable place, inhabited by a mixed population. The medium heat throughout the year is from 81° to 82°.

The settlement latterly is of but little importance. Pepper is the only produce of the adjacent country; which is mountainous and woody. The air is full of malignant vapours, and the mountains always covered with thick clouds, which burst in storms of thunder, rain, &c.

Ben-Cowse, or Nic-Kowse, t. Algiers, in Constantina; 23 SSE. Seteef, 63 SW. Constantina. It is surrounded with a mud wall, and defended by a garrison and 3 pieces of cannon. The inhabitants are chiefly Zwowiah, under the protection of Seedy Lassan, their tutelar saint. We have the traces here of a large city, with the remains, as usual, of pillars, broken walls, and cisterns; but at present the Bencowsians make themselves famous for the tombs, which they pretend to show of the Seven Sleepers, whom they strenuously maintain to have been Mussulmen, and to have slept at this place.

Benevento, (an. Maleventum, afterwards Ben-eventum), city, Italy, capital of a small duchy belonging to the States of the Church, but included in Principato Ultra, Naples; 22 E. Capua, 30 NE. by E. Naples, 109 SE. Rome. Lon. 14. 38. E. Lat. 41. 7. N. Pop. 13,832. Abp. see. It is situated on the declivity, and at the point of a hill, between two fertile narrow valleys, in one of which runs the Sabato, and in the other the Calore, which soon after unite into one stream. It contains a cathedral, 8 churches, and 14 convents, and was formerly more considerable than at present. No city in Italy, except Rome, contains so many remains of ancient sculpture as Benevento; scarce a wall is built by any thing, but fragments of altars, tombs, columns, and entablatures; a volume might be filled with inscriptions collected here. A triumphal arch, erected in honour of Trajan, A. D. 114, is of splendid architecture, one of the most perfect of the kind existing, and now forms one of the gates of the city.

Bengal, country, India, belonging to Great Britain, and most easterly of Hindoostan, lying on each side of the Ganges; bounded N. by Bootan, E. by Assam and Meckley, S. by the bay of Bengal, and W. by Bahar and Orissa; extending from Lon. 86. to 92. 30. E., and from Lat. 21. 30. to 26. 40. N. It is about 400 miles long, and 300 broad. Sq. miles about 86,000. Hamilton estimates the population of Bengal, Bahar, and Benares at 29,000,000. Geographical sq. m. 162,000. The presidency of Bengal includes in addition, territories in Hindoostan proper and Orissa, with a population estimated at 10,000,000; total of the presidency 39,000,000. Of this province it has been said that it is the brightest jewel in the British crown. The revenues derived from it in 1811-12 amounted to £2,590,000 sterling.

Bengal anciently formed a particular kingdom, and was sometimes divided into several. It is one of the richest countries of India; the climate is soft and temperate, and the land is wonderfully fertilized by abundant and periodical rains, by which the rivers, and especially the Ganges, overflow the country; so that the inhabitants are compelled in many places during the inundation to make use of boats. Silk, cotton, rice, sugar, pepper, tobacco, indigo, and opium are the principal productions.

Bengal contains 3 very large cities, Calcutta, Moorshedabad, and Dacca, the capitals of the 3 districts into which it is divided. It has also many flourishing inland trading towns, containing from 10, to 20,000 inhabitants, as Hoogly, Bogwangola, Cossimbazar, Nudeah, Mauldah, Mungulhaut, &c. The principal rivers are the Ganges, Burrampooter, Dummooda, Coosa, Sampoo or Teesta, besides many smaller ones.—The Dutch possess the town of Chinsura, the French Chandernagore, and the Danes Serampore, with a small territory adjoining each; all on the Hoogly from 15 to 20 miles above Calcutta.

Benguela, country, Africa, bounded N. by Angola, E. by the country of Jaga Cassangi, S. by Mataman, and W. by the sea; Cape Negro forms its S. boundaries, from whence mountains run northward, in which are contained the springs of many rivers. The productions are similar to those of Angola and Congo; one of the principal is manioc; divers sort of palms are found; dates grow in great abundance; the vines naturally form alleys and arbours; cassia and tamarinds also flourish; and from the humidity of the soil, they have two fruit seasons in the year. The air of the country is exceedingly unwholesome, and is said even to effect its produce, and taint the waters of the rivers. The chief towns are Old Benguela, St. Philip, or New Benguela, and Man-ki-kondo, and Kaschil. Lon. 30. to 35. E. Lat. 13. 30. to 15. 30. S.

Benin, km. Western Africa, the limits of which are not well ascertained, but the name may be applied to that part of the coast extending from the river Lagos, the eastern limit of the Slave Coast, to the Formosa, about 180 miles. The interior limit is unknown. The whole coast presents a succession of estuaries, some of them very broad, and their origin never explored. Between the Lagos and Cross rivers, the number of rivers flowing into the gulf of Guinea is said to exceed 20, some of them very broad and deep. This tract, called the Delta of Benin, is about 260 miles in extent. The aspect of the coast and the great mass of water flowing into the gulf, have led to the supposition that the waters of the Niger here find an entrance into the ocean.

This region has been but little explored, and is little known. The country is low and flat, the soil on the banks of the rivers very fertile, but the climate unhealthy. The inhabitants are of mild disposition; polygamy is practised; almost all labour is performed by females; the government is despotic. Chief towns, Benin, Agatton, Bododa, Ozebo, and Meiberg, which are situated on the Formosa, the principal river.

Benin, capital of the above kingdom, on the Formosa; 70 Agatton. Lon. 5. 6. E. Lat. 6. 12. N. This town according to some is 18 miles in circuit, the largest street 3 miles long, and others nearly equal; according to other statements it is only 4 miles in circuit. The streets are filled with various articles of merchandise, and present the appearance of a crowded market, though always clean. The houses are large, and though their walls are of clay, the reeds and leaves with which they are covered give them a pleasing appearance. The king's palace consists of a great number of square enclosures.

Berlin, city, capital of the Prussian states, and residence of the king, in Brandenburg, on the banks of the Spree; 25 E. Brandenburg, 75 SW. Stettin, 300 N. by W. Vienna. Lon. 13. 22. E. Lat. 52. 32. N. Pop. in 1661, only 6,500; in 1812, 166,584; and in 1818, including the military, 188,485. Houses in 1812, 7,133. Jews, 2,698.

It is one of the most beautiful cities in Europe. The walls are 11 English miles in circuit; and the entrance is through 25 gates. The streets are generally broad and strait, and the squares regular and spacious. The houses are generally of 2 stories, built of fine white freestone, or of brick covered with a thin coating of plaster. There are in all 33 churches; 12 Lutheran, 6 Calvinist, and 8 common to both; 2 Catholic and 1 Moravian. It contains numerous public buildings and institutions; among which are the royal castle, 430 feet long, and 276 wide, containing the king's library of upwards of 200,000 volumes, a cabinet of antiquities, minerals, and medals, and a museum of natural and artificial curiosities; a magnificent cathedral, a splendid arsenal, a royal academy of sciences, an academy of fine arts, a university, 5 gymnasias, and various other institutions. The university was instituted in 1810, by the union of several smaller institutions. It has a library, an observatory, an anatomical and a zoological museum, a botanic garden, and had in 1817, 67 teachers and 600 students.

The city is composed of 5 parts or towns. 1. Berlin Proper, founded by Albert in 1163. 2. Coln, or Cologne-on-the-Spree. The Spree here divides itself into two branches, forming an island on which this part is built. 3. Frederickswarden, or Frederick's Island, built also on an island in the Spree. 4. Dorotheenstadt, or New Town, built by the elector Frederick William I, and named after his wife. 5. Frederickstadt, founded by Frederick William, and is the largest of the 5 towns—Berlin is indebted for its chief establishments to the celebrated Frederick II., who is supposed to have expended yearly $400,000 in its improvement.

The manufactures consist of silk, porcelain, serge, fustian, muslin, camlets, and other woollens, linen and cotton stuffs, stockings, carpets, embroidery, jewellery, bronze, iron, steel, black and white lead, borax, vitriol, dyestuffs, (particularly Prussian blue,) tobacco, wax, starch, powder, soap, leather, hats, clocks, watches, &c. One of the most important branches of commerce is bookselling.—Natives, Frederick II. Canitz, Baumgarten, and Chodowiecky.

Bermuda Hundred, small settlement on a point of land between the junction of the Appomatox with James river; 2 N. City Point, 22 by land, and upwards of 50 by the river, ESE. Richmond.

Bermudas Islands, or Somers Islands, cluster of small islands in the Atlantic Ocean. They are in number 400, or more, but for the most part so small and so barren, that they have neither inhabitants nor name. Hardly one eighth part is inhabited. The most considerable of these islands are St. George, St. David, Cooper, Ireland, Somerset, Long Island, Bird Island, and Nonsuch. The first has a town, St. George's Town, and the two following some villages, the others only farms dispersed.

The air is so healthy, that sick people from the continent of America frequently go thither for the recovery of their health. The winter is hardly perceptible; it may be said to be perpetually spring; the trees never lose their verdure, and the leaves only fall when new ones begin to appear. Birds sing and breed without intermission.

But these advantages are counterbalanced by frightful storms, accompanied by formidable thunders, which are announced by a circle round the moon. Some fertile plains are seen, but in general the country is mountainous. The soil is of divers colours, brown, white, and red, of which the former is the best; although light and stony, it is in general rich and fertile. The water is in general salt; there is but little fresh, except rain water preserved in cisterns. The inhabitants gather two harvests of Indian corn in a year, one in July and the other in December; this forms their principal food. They likewise cultivate tobacco, legumes, and fruit sufficient for their wants. Their trees are principally the cedar and palmetto. Besides these, they have orange trees, olive, laurels, pear trees, &c. The red wood is peculiar to these islands; its coloured fruit feeds worms, which change to flies, a little larger than cochineal, instead of which they are used. There are no venomous reptiles. Building of ships and sloops is the principal trade of the inhabitants. These islands extend from NE. to SW. about 45 miles; the whole shore is surrounded with rocks, most of which are dry at low water, but covered at flood; 230 leagues SE. Cape Fear in N. C. The north point of these islands lies Lon. 64. 28. W. Lat. 32. 22. N. Pop. 10,381; of whom 5,462 were whites, and 4,919 were slaves.—The Methodist Missionary Society have 2 missionaries here.

Bern, or Berne, canton, Switz., bounded N. by Soleure and Aargau, E. by Lucerne, Unterwalden, and Uri, S. by the Vallais, W. by Vaud, Friburg, Neuchâtel, and France. It is divided into 24 bailiwicks. Pop. 297,600. Sq. m. 3,635. It formerly included the present cantons of Vaud and Aargau.

The southern part is very mountainous ; the northern more level, and in many places highly productive in wine, fruits, and corn. In the mountainous parts the principal object of attention is the breeding of horses and cattle, the export of which, and also of cheese, is extensive. Other articles are hemp, flax, vegetables, salt, &c. The French and German languages are both extensively spoken. The religion is Calvinism.

Bern, or Berne, city, Switz., capital of the canton of Bern, on the Aar ; 45 S. Bâle, 50 SW. Zurich, 75 NE. Geneva. Lon. 7. 26. E. Lat. 46. 57. N. Pop. 13,339. H. 1,062. It is situated on the declivity of a hill, surrounded by very romantic scenery, washed on 3 sides by the Aar, and is elevated 1,708 feet above the sea. The streets are kept remarkably clean ; the 3 principal ones are furnished with piazzas on both sides ; and the houses are generally built of stone. It contains 4 Reformed churches, 3 hospitals, a public library of 20,000 vols., and a college with professors of mathematics, languages, theology, law, and medicine. The manufactures consist of crape, silk, linen, woolen, and cotton stuffs, leather, clocks, and watches ; but the trade is not extensive ; no great roads to France or Italy passing through the place. The meetings of the general assembly or diet of Switzerland are held by rotation at Bern, Zurich, and Lucerne.—Native, Haller.

Bethlehem, t. Palestine; 6 S. Jerusalem. Pop. upwards of 2,500; 1,500 Catholics, 1000 Greeks, a few Armenians and Turks. It was anciently called Bethlehem of Judah, or Bethlehem Ephraim, to distinguish it from another Bethlehem in Zebulun. Though never distinguished for the number or wealth of its inhabitants, it became memorable for the birth of David, the royal Psalmist, and still more so for the birth of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. For which reason, though reduced to a village, it has ever been regarded as a place of high renown, and as such is much visited by travellers and pilgrims.

It is finely situated on a considerable eminence, in a fertile and pleasant country, abounding in hills and valleys, covered with vines and olives. It contains a magnificent church, built by the empress Helena, in the form of a cross, and said to be on the place of the nativity. The convent is a great solid structure, rather resembling a fortification, and includes 3 monasteries for Catholics, Greeks and Armenians; but in 1807 it had only 10 monks. In a subterraneous grotto, now contained within the walls of the convent, a small marble basin is shewn, which is affirmed to be the manger in which our Saviour was laid, and the whole grotto is enriched by numerous silver and crystal lamps. The country south of Bethlehem is called in the New Testament the Hill-country of Judea. The present inhabitants of the town are said to be turbulent, but industrious.

Biledulgerid, country, Africa, lying S. of Tunis and Algiers, supposed to be about 180 miles square. It is commonly supposed that it received its name from the Arabic words Biled el gerid, signifying the land of dates; because it abounds with that kind of fruit more than any other country in Africa; but Dr. Shaw derives it from Jeridedry, signifying dry country.

The whole country is very mountainous, sandy, and barren, producing little or no sustenance. Some parts of it are quite covered with large thick woods of palm-trees, from which dates are gathered. The climate is hot and unhealthy; the people lean, and of a swarthy and shrivelled complexion. As to their character, they are represented as lewd, treacherous, thievish, and cruel. They are a mixture of the ancient Africans and wild Arabs; the former living in some kind of cities, towns, or villages; the latter in tents, and ranging from place to place for food and plunder. The country has few rivers or towns.

BIRMAH, extensive and powerful empire, Asia, including the ancient kingdoms of Ava, Pegu, and Aracan. Its limits are not ascertained with precision, but according to the most accurate accounts, it extends from Lon. 92. to 102. E. and from Lat. 9. to 26. N. 1,200 miles long, and 700 broad; bounded N. by Assam, Thibet, and China, and W. by a range of mountains which separates it from British India; the S. and E. boundaries have not been accurately ascertained.

The climate of the Birman Empire is generally healthy and agreeable; not subject to extreme heat or cold for any considerable length of time. The soil in the southern parts is fertile, and produces abundant crops of rice; in the northern parts the country is mountainous; but is extremely fertile in the plains and valleys. The art of agriculture, however, is but imperfectly understood. The productions are rice, wheat, tobacco, sugar, indigo, cotton, and the various tropical fruits.

Minerals, such as iron, lead, tin, antimony, arsenic, and sulphur, are found in great abundance. There are also several rich mines of gold and silver; and precious stones, as rubies, sapphires, amethysts, chrysolites, garnets, jaspers, loadstone, and beautiful marble, are met with in various parts. The commerce of the Empire is very considerable. The manufactures consist chiefly of cotton and silk goods, saltpetre, gunpowder, various kinds of pottery, and marble statues of the idols they adore.

The population, is not accurately known; Colonel Symes, however, says he was credibly informed that the number of cities, towns, and villages, amounted to 8,000, exclusive of Aracan; from which he estimates the population at 14,500,000, and including Aracan, at 17 millions. But Captain Cox, who succeeded Col. Symes as ambassador, does not estimate the population above 8,000,000.

The Birmans are lively, inquisitive, and intelligent; and, at the same time, irascible and impatient. In some respects they display the ferocity of barbarians, and in others, all the softness and humanity of polished society. They resemble the Chinese, rather than the Hindoos. The women are fairer than the women of Hindoostan, but not so delicately formed. The men are not tall but athletic; they pluck out their hair instead of shaving with a razor. Polygamy is in practice among them. They have made considerable progress in knowledge, and their system of jurisprudence is said to be superior to that of the Hindoos. In religion they are worshippers of the Buddha; but the image which represents him is usually called Godama. They have numerous temples and idols. Other religions are tolerated. The government is despotic.

The chief river is the Irrawady. The present capital is Ummerapoora. The other most remarkable cities are, Ava, Pegu, Aracan, Rangoon, Prome, and Monchaboo.

Birmingham, t. Eng., in Warwickshire, on a declivity, on the river Rea, which joins the Tame, 3 m. NE.; 62 NW. Oxford, 87 N. Bristol, 109 NNW. London. Pop. 85,753. Families 18,165. H. 16,653. Of the inhabitants 81,642 consist of families connected with trade and manufactures.

Birmingham has long been distinguished for the variety, extent, and excellence of its manufactures, particularly in hardware. With perhaps the exception of Manchester, it is the greatest manufacturing town in England. Among the principal manufactures are buttons of immense variety, buckles, and snuff boxes; toys, trinkets, and jewellery; polished steel watch chains, cork screws, &c.; plated goods for the dining and tea table; japanned, and enamelled articles; brass work of every description; swords and fire arms; medals and coins of various kinds; copying machines, and pneumatic apparatuses; the more ponderous productions of the casting furnace, and rolling mill; and, indeed, every hardware commodity that can be considered as curious, useful, or ornamental. The manufactories are established upon the largest scale, and the most astonishing ingenuity. A coining mill was erected in 1788, which is now capable of striking between 30, and 40,000 pieces of money in an hour. Before the close of the last war no less than 14,500 stand of arms were delivered per week to the ordnance office. At the pin works it is said 12,000 pins can be cut and pointed, and 50,000 pin-heads can be made from the wire in an hour.

Birmingham is about 2 miles in length. The lower part of the town consists chiefly of old buildings, is crowded with workshops and ware houses, and is inhabited principally by manufacturers; but the upper part has a superior appearance, consisting of new and regular streets, and containing a number of elegant buildings. It contains 3 churches and 5 chapels of ease; and many places of worship belonging to dissenters, among which are 4 for Baptists, 3 for Independents, 3 for Methodists, 2 for Unitarians, 2 for Roman Catholics, and 2 Synagogues. St. Martin's church has a fine lofty spire, with a peal of 12 bells, and a set of chimes. It is distinguished for its charitable institutions, and has various schools, and several libraries, one of which contains 10,000 vols.

The town has the benefit of several canals, which enable it to carry on a direct intercourse with foreign countries. It has 3 weekly markets, and 2 annual fairs. The soil about the town is dry, and the climate is considered remarkably healthy. The average mortality for 6 years ending 1801, of Birmingham, was only 1 to 59; of Manchester 1 to 37; and of London 1 to 31.

Alava.....	1,138.....	71,396.....	Vittoria.

Biscay is a mountainous country, abounding in wood, and has mines of lead and iron. It abounds in apples, pears, lemons, oranges, figs, nuts, and currants; but produces little wine. The air is mild and more temperate than the rest of Spain. The country is well cultivated, and the houses clean and convenient.—The inhabitants call themselves Euscaldunæ, and boast of their descent from the ancient Cantabri, and preserve strong traces of the character of that high spirited and independent people. They are robust, brave, active, industrious, at the same time haughty and irritable; of open, animated countenance and handsome persons. Their language is supposed to be a dialect of the Celtic, and nearly allied to the Armorican.

Biscay forms a kind of separate state distinct from the rest of Spain, governed according to its ancient laws and usages. The king of Spain, who is simply styled lord of Biscay, has no right to impose taxes, and no custom houses were allowed till lately within the province.

Biscay Proper is bounded N. by the bay of Biscay, E. by Guipuscoa, S. by Alava, and W. by Santander. The coast is inhabited by seafaring people and fishermen; and in the interior great quantities of iron are extracted from the ore and wrought into different articles. The richest mines are in the vicinity of Bilboa and Somorrostro.

Bishbesh, or Basta, (an. Bubastus, or Bubaste, and Pibesel.) t. Egypt; 40 NE. Cairo, 47 SW. Tineh. Lon. 31. 52. E. Lat. 30. 33. N. It is situated on the branch cut from the Khalits Abu Meneggi, or Canal of Trajan, to that which runs from the Nile to the lake of Menzaleh, near Tineh, anciently the Pelusiac canal. Here are many monuments of antiquity and hieroglyphics. Enormous masses of granite, almost all mutilated, lie in great heaps; many of them made into mill-stones, some of which, completely cut, have been left on the spot, probably from want of means to carry them away. This city was raised on massy foundations of unburnt brick; the extent is about 600 or 700 fathoms each way. In the centre is an immense basin, in the middle of which the monuments are situated. In this city the feast of Diana was celebrated annually by the Egyptians; on which occasion, Herodotus tells us, not less than 700,000 people assembled, besides children; it was a kind of bacchanalian orgy, and the quantity of wine consumed was astonishing. To this place were sent all the mummies of cats made in Egypt.

Bizerta, or Benzert, (an. Hippo Diarrhytus, or Zaritus), s-p. Africa, in Tunis; 30 N. Tunis. Lon. 9. 48. E. Lat. 37. 10. N. Pop. 5,000. It is pleasantly situated upon a canal, betwixt an extensive lake and the sea. The harbour, formerly the finest in this part of Africa, now receives only small vessels. It is about a mile in circuit, defended by several castles and batteries, the principal of which are towards the sea. It was once large, and contained about 6,000 houses. The lake upon which Bizerta is situated, has an open communication with the sea. Besides fish and fruit of all kinds, the environs abound with corn, pulse, oil, cotton, and a variety of other valuable productions. The gulf of Bizerta, the Sinus Hipponensis of the ancients, is a beautiful and sandy inlet, near 12 miles in breadth. The bottom of it being low, presents a delightful prospect, through variety of groves and plantations of olive trees, a great way into the country; but to the eastward the eye is bounded by a high rocky shore, which reaches as far as Cape Zibeet, a distance of 21 miles.

Black Sea, or Euxine Sea, inland sea, partly in Europe and partly in Asia, bounded N. by Russian Tartary, E. by Mingrelia, Circassia, and Georgia, S. by Natolia, and W. by Eu. Turkey. Lon. 28. to 41. 30. E. Lat. 41. to 46. 30. N. Its length, from Rumania to the mouth of the Rione, is 932 miles; its breadth, from Cape Baba in Natolia to Odessa, about 380; circ. about 3,800 miles. It communicates with the sea of Azof by the straits of Caffa, and with the sea of Marmora by the straits of Constantinople.

The Black sea has been supposed to have received its name from its black and rocky shores, or from its dangerous navigation, or from the darkness which often covers it during winter, in consequence of thick fogs and heavy rains. Dr. Clarke states that the navigation is rendered difficult not only by dark fogs, but also by shallows which are laid down on no chart, and by furious and sudden storms. Some, however, represent the navigation as not more dangerous than that of other seas.

The chief rivers that flow into this sea, are the Danube, Dnieper, Dniester, Bog, Cuban, Rione, Kizil-Ermak, and Sakaria.—The principal ports on the Black sea are Odessa, Otchakov, Cherson, Eupatoria, Sevastopol, on the north; and Sinobe and Trebisond on the south.—The Turks granted by treaties in 1774 and 1791, a free passage to the Russian navy through the Dardanelles. The Black sea was opened to Austria in 1784. Since then it has been opened to other European nations, and its commerce greatly increased.

BOHEMIA, a name derived from Boii, a Celtic tribe, called by the inhabitants Czechy, by the Germans Bohmen, km. Europe, forming a part of the Austrian empire, bounded N. by the km of Saxony, by Lusatia, and Silesia, E. by Moravia, S. by Austria Proper, and W. by Bavaria. In addition to its present limits it once included Moravia, Silesia, and Lusatia. Its greatest length is about 200 miles, greatest breadth 180. Sq. m. 20,170. Pop. in 1813, 3,203,222, of whom 1,100,000 are Germans ; 2,052,593 Tschechen or Czechowe, a people originally from Scythia ; and 50,629 Jews. Catholics 3,102,339, Calvinists 34,800, Lutherans 10,900, Menonists, 6,500.

Towns 276; burghs 110; villages 11,904; houses 525,101; university 1; gymnasia 15; high schools 20; town and country schools upwards of 2,200. Pop. in 1817, 3,250,394.

Divisions. It is divided into 16 circles, which are named from their chief towns, viz. Prague, Beraun, Biczow, Budweis, Buntzlau, Chrudim, Czaslau, Elnbogen, Kaurzim, Klattau, Konigin-gratz, Leitmeritz, Pilsin, Prachim, Rakonitz, Saats, and Tabor.

Face of the country. Bohemia in respect to general structure may be compared to a great basin, being surrounded by mountains. The Erzgebirg are on the north, the Sudetian chain and the Riesengebirge are NE. the mountains of Moravia SE. and S., and the Bohmerwald W.—The rivers are the Elbe with its branches, Muldau, Auxa, Erlitz, Dobrawa, Iser, Eger, &c.

Soil and productions. The soil consists for the most part of a fat mould, and notwithstanding the backward state of agriculture, it yields corn, pulse, hops, flax, hemp, fruit, and garden vegetables in abundance; some wine and saffron.—The climate in the interior is temperate, but in the elevated parts severe.

Minerals. Bohemia is very rich in mineral productions. Its gold mines, formerly rich, are now nearly exhausted. The most important mineral product is tin, which is abundant. Other minerals are silver, iron, lead, copper, quicksilver, cobalt, zinc, arsenic, bismuth, calamine, antimony, sulphur, saltpetre, vitriol, alum, and coal; garnets, sapphires, topazes, hyacinths, chrysolites, amethysts, opals, chalcedonies, cornelians, and agates; marble, alabaster, porphyry, jasper, asbestos, serpentine, gypsum, moonstone, &c.

Commerce. Bohemia exports great quantities of manufactures, metals, vegetable products, cattle, and wool. Its exports are chiefly sent to Vienna, Trieste, Leipsic, and Hamburg. Prague is the only town of considerable trade in the country.

Religion. The established religion is the Catholic, with one archbishop, that of Prague, who has for suffragans the bishops of Leitmeritz, Konigingratz, and Budweis.

Bohemia is one of the most populous portions of the Austrian dominions. The nobility are not numerous, but in better circumstances than most other parts of Germany. There are reckoned 10 princes, 110 counts, 82 barons, and 238 knights. The peasantry labour under the most galling servitude.

Bologna, (an. Felsina, Bononia, and Boionia,) city, Italy, the 2d in size in the Ecclesiastical States, capital of the delegation of Bologna, formerly of the Bolognese; 32 SE. Mantua, 48 N. Florence, 180 NNW. Rome. Lon. 11. 21. E. Lat. 44. 30. N. Pop. 64,078. H. 8,000. Abp. see. It is situated at the foot of the Apennines, in a beautiful and extremely fertile plain, between the rivers Savena and Reno. It is of an oblong form, 6 or 7 miles in circuit, and surrounded by a brick wall. The streets are narrow, and rather gloomy; the houses are tolerably built, having arcades, and are flat roofed. The public buildings are large and elegant, remarkable both for their architecture and their internal decorations. No town in Italy except Rome is said to contain more valuable paintings by the first masters. The number of churches has been differently stated at 74, and about 200; many of them elegant. The other public buildings and palaces are numerous. The tower of Asinelli, built in 1109, stands in the centre of the city. It is 371 feet high exclusive of the cupola, which was originally 130 feet high, now reduced to nearly 70. The tower is ascended by 464 wooden steps, and is the loftiest in Italy, except the cupola of St. Peter's.

The university of Bologna according to some was founded in 433, by Theodosius; according to others it was founded by Charlemagne. It first drew the attention of Europe to the Roman Law, and received the title of Mater Studiorum, and became so famous that about the beginning of the 13th century it is said to have been attended by 10,000 students. The number of students in 1819 was 413. It is now distinguished chiefly as a school of medicine. The city contains an academy of sciences, the Academia Clementina Bonarum Artium, a public library of 150,000 volumes, and other institutions. Here are manufactures of cloth, silk stockings, twisted silk, satins, damasks, taffetas, velvet, gauze, crape, and linen.—Natives, Campeggi, Marcello, Malpighi, Aldrovandi, Marsigli, Manfredi, Beccari, Monti, Galvani, Dominichino, Guido, and Pellegrino.

The houses are built of logs, and thatched. The whole country around is heath and waste, covered with rein-deer moss, on which are pastured 2,000 or 3,000 rein-deer, belonging to the crown of Russia.

Bolsena, (an. Volscinium,) t. Poppedom, in the patrimony of St. Peter, on the side of a lake; 7 S. Orvieto, 48 NW. Rome. Lon. 11. 54. E. Lat. 42. 37. N. It was one of the twelve principal cities of Etruria; and it is asserted that it contained at one time near 2,000 statues in the temples, squares, and streets; at present it is but a poor place; it is however, surrounded with a pretty high wall, flanked with towers, and encompassed by a dry ditch.

The lake, anciently called Lacus Volsciniensis and Lacus Tarquiniensis, is of an oval form; its circumference has been variously estimated from 24 to 30, and even 40 miles. It is one of the most agreeable lakes in Italy, being surrounded with very fruitful hills, and a variety of towns and villages. There are also two islands, called Martana and Pressentina in it; the former is very inconsiderable, and has only a hermitage with its chapel, and some trees on its sides; the other is much larger, having a fine Franciscan convent, with large gardens, and a little wood.

Pop. estimated by Hamilton in 1815, at 220,000; but the population of the island of Bombay, together with that of Colaba, was stated by enumeration in 1816, at 456,987; of whom 403,786 were Hindoos, 27,811 Mahometans, 13,155 Parsees, 11,454 native Christians, and 781 Jews.

The island is about 10 miles long and 3 broad. It is connected with the island of Salsette by a causeway constructed in 1805. It is separated from the main land by a narrow channel, and forms, together with the neighbouring islands of Colaba, Salsette, Butcher's island, Elephanta, and Caranjah, a commodious and well sheltered harbour. The city is about 1 mile long, and $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile broad, and is surrounded by fortifications. In the centre of the town is a green, an open space, which is surrounded by many well built houses; a magnificent government house, an elegant English church, a large bazar, &c.

Bombay is favourably situated for commerce, and has an extensive trade with the countries situated in the Persian and Arabian gulfs; with both the western and eastern coasts of India; the islands of the Eastern ocean, and China; also with Europe and America. The exports in the year 1811-12, amounted to £2,003,411.—The climate often proves fatal to Europeans, the liver complaint being more frequent here than in any other part of India.—The extent of territory in the presidency of Bombay is not well defined. Hamilton estimates it at 10,000 geographical square miles, and the population at upwards of 2,500,000. The chief seaport towns, besides Bombay, are Surat, Cambay, Gogo, and Broach.

Since 1814 Bombay has been a station of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; and in 1820, they had 5 missionaries employed here and in the neighbourhood; having in their schools about 1,000 scholars. The Methodist society have also supported a missionary here.

Borneo, isl. Asia, next to New-Holland, the largest in the known world; about 800 miles long, and 700 broad. Lon. 109. to 119. E. Lat. 7. N. to 4. 20. S. Pop. uncertain; by some estimated at 3,000,000; by Hassel at 5,000,000. Sq. m. about 300,000.

The climate is temperate for the latitude; the coast for 10 or 15 miles inland generally marshy, and the climate unhealthy to Europeans. Violent earthquakes are sometimes experienced. The interior is partly mountainous; in the central part is a ridge, called the Crystal Mountains. There are many considerable rivers; those best known are the Borneo, Banjar-Massim, and Passmir. The island has been but little explored by Europeans.

Valuable minerals are found; fine diamonds, some weighing 20, 30, or 40 carats; gold in considerable quantities; copper, tin, iron, pearls, and mother of pearl. Vegetables are numerous; pepper is the staple production; and of camphor about 4,375 pounds are annually exported, esteemed the best from the eastern islands. In many parts it is covered with forests of tall timber; has a variety of animals, as elephants, tigers, panthers, leopards, wild boars, deer, &c.; but the most remarkable is the oran-outang, an animal bearing a strong resemblance to the human species. The salangane or swallow, which constructs the edible bird's nest, and the bird of paradise are common.

Borneo is inhabited by various races of men, some represented as mild, especially those dwelling on the coast, others in the interior, as wild and savage. There are numbers of Mahometans; and on the coast are Chinese, Malays, Javanese, and natives of Celebes. The island is divided into several districts, governed by independent sovereigns. Several European powers have endeavoured to establish settlements in Borneo; but none, except that of the Dutch, have been attended with any permanent success. The Dutch have a fort and factory at Banjar-Massim. Among the other places of trade are Borneo, Sambas, and Succadana.

Borneo, s-p. and capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Borneo, on NW. part of the island. Lon. 113. 40. E. Lat. 3. 40. N. It is situated on a river 10 miles from the sea, the channel having 6 fathoms of water. The houses occupy the banks on both sides, extending inland about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile. All are supported on posts, and are ascended by stairs. The town carries on considerable trade with China in black wood, clove bark, camphor, canes, pepper, dammen, and birds' nests.

The soil is stony, but fertile, with excellent pastures; oats, butter, and fish constitute the principal riches of the inhabitants. There are mines of coal and quarries of marble in the island.

Borno, r. Africa, which runs into the Atlantic, 10 S. the Camarones.

Bornou, extensive kingdom, in the interior of Africa; the limits not well defined, but supposed to be bounded N. by the deserts of Bilna and of Lybia, E. by unknown regions, S. by Bergoo and Begherme, and W. by Cassina and Asben. The emperor is reputed by far the most powerful sovereign in the interior of Africa; Bergoo, Begherme, Wangara, and Cassina being tributary to him.

The climate is hot; the soil fertile; the chief produce grain, maize, also rice and beans; grapes, apricots, melons, limes, lemons, and pomegranates, abundant; sheep, goats, cows, horses, camels, and buffaloes, common; also lions, leopards, civet cats, antelopes, crocodiles, hippopotami, &c.; ostriches and partridges; and a variety of reptiles. The country is traversed by the river Wed-el-Gazel. The mountains are the Tibesti. The commerce is carried on chiefly by the merchants of Fezzan. The exports are slaves, gold, and civet.

The power of the sovereign appears to be absolute, though the throne is in some measure elective. The military strength consists chiefly in cavalry; the arms are the sabre, lance, pike, and bow. The general habits of life appear to be marked with great simplicity. The inhabitants are represented as courteous and humane; but violently addicted to gaming. They are partly Mahometans and partly pagans.

Bornou, city, Africa, capital of the above kingdom, about a day's journey from the Wed-el-Gazel; 420 W. Dongola, 600 SE. Mourzouk. Lon. according to Major Rennel, 22. 57. E. Lat. 24. 32. N. It is a large city; according to Ben Ali four times the size of Tripoli; and according to Hadji-Hamet larger than Cairo. The houses are built in a very straggling manner. The palace is of vast extent, surrounded by high walls; the mosques numerous, built of stone, and contain schools, which are supported at the expense of the sultan.

Pop. in 1765, 15,520; in 1790, 18,038; in 1800, 24,937; in 1810, 33,250; in 1820, 43,298; white males 20,108; white females 21,450; coloured persons 1,690; other persons 50.

It is situated at the head of Massachusetts bay, built, with the exception of the part called South Boston, on a peninsula of uneven surface, and is nearly 3 miles in length, and 1 mile and 25 rods, where widest, in breadth ; and is connected with the main land at the south end by a narrow isthmus, called the Neck, leading to Roxbury. The outer harbour is formed by Nahant Point on the north, and Point Alderton on the south, and is studded by about 40 small islands, 15 of which afford excellent pasture ; and are frequented in summer by numerous parties of pleasure. The inner harbour is so capacious, that 500 vessels may ride at anchor in a good depth of water ; while the entrance is so narrow as scarcely to admit 2 ships abreast. It is one of the best harbours in the United States, accessible at every season, and protected from all winds. The entrance is defended by 2 strong forts, Fort Independence on Castle Island, and Fort Warren on Governor's Island. The city is admirably situated for commerce, and is a place of great trade and opulence. The quantity of shipping belonging to this port exceeds that of any other port in the United States, with the exception of New York ; and in 1816, amounted to 143,420 tons ; in 1821, 126,323 tons. In 1821 the number of foreign arrivals was 854 ; clearances 613 ; arrivals coastwise 1,831 ; clearances 2,082. The duties on imports, in 1821, amounted to nearly $4,000,000. The city pays one third of the state tax. Among the manufacturing establishments are brass and iron founderies, a type foundery, and 2 large glass manufactories, in which window glass and fancy and ornamental work are made of a very superior quality. The other manufactures are cordage, cards for wool and cotton, paper-hangings, hats, plate, soap, candles, rum, sugar, &c.

Boston contains 155 streets, 27 lanes, exclusive of courts and squares, and about 80 wharfs and quays ; 11 banks including a branch of the United States bank, 12 insurance offices, a state house, a court house, a theatre, 2 jails, an almshouse, a workhouse, an asylum for female orphans, and one for indigent boys, 4 market houses, 4 museums, a circus, and a riding school ; a Medical college, (see Cambridge ;) and 29 places of public worship ; 11 for Congregationalists, 5 for Episcopalians, 3 for Baptists, 3 for Universalists, 2 for Methodists, 1 for Roman Catholics, 1 for Friends, 1 for Africans, a New Jerusalem church, and the seamen's chapel. Many of the churches are elegant, and most of them are ornamented with steeples or cupolas. To the public buildings may be added the old state house, the Massachusetts general hospital, the Custom house, Faneuil hall, Concert hall, Barristers hall, and Merchants hall. The last is in the same building with the post-office, and has an extensive public reading room, which is a grand focus of political and commercial intelligence. Among the public objects may be enumerated the Gallery of Fine Arts and the Washington Gardens.

In 1817, there was erected on both sides of Market Street a block of stores, 485 feet in length on one side, and 442 on the other, and 4 stories high ; and on Central wharf another immense pile of building was completed the same year, 1,240 feet in length, containing 54 stores 4 stories high, and having a spacious hall in the centre, over which is erected a convenient observatory. These buildings, for extent, convenience, and elegance, are said not to be exceeded in the commercial world. The general hospital is a very spacious and elegant edifice, and the new court house is large and commodious, both built of Chelmsford granite. The state house is built on ground, elevated about 100 feet above the level of the harbour, and is a noble edifice. It is 173 feet in front, and 61 deep, and its situation and size render it a very conspicuous object. The dome is 50 feet in diameter, terminated by a circular lantern, at an elevation of 100 feet from the foundation. The prospect from the top is exceedingly magnificent and beautiful, surpassing every thing of the kind in this country, and will bear a comparison with the Castle hill of Edinburgh, the famous bay of Naples, or any other of the most picturesque scenes in Europe. Here may be seen at a view, the town with its shipping and buildings, the harbour and its islands, Charles river, a fine country, ornamented with elegant country seats, and more than 20 flourishing towns. In front of the state house is the common, containing 44 acres, surrounded by the mall, an extensive and most delightful public walk. In the north part of the city the streets are narrow, irregular, and crooked ; many of the houses of wood, more than a century old, and built with little regard to convenience or taste ; but in the parts recently built, the streets are wider, the houses mostly of brick, and the private buildings display more elegance and splendour, than in any other city in the United States. The city exhibits a very picturesque and beautiful view when approached from the sea ; and its general appearance is much admired by strangers. The surrounding country is well cultivated, populous, and remarkably pleasant, having numerous elegant country seats, and many handsome villages ; and surpasses in natural scenery and artificial improvement the vicinity of any city in the Union.

Boston is the literary as well as commercial metropolis of New England. It is well supplied with schools, both public and private ; and has several valuable libraries, and numerous literary and humane societies. The Boston Athenæum is a noble establishment, commenced in 1806, and has a large brick building appropriated to its accommodation. It contains a library of 21,000 volumes, is well furnished with domestic and foreign periodical publications, and open every day in the week, except Sunday. The Boston Library contains 8,000 volumes ; the Theological Library 2,000 ; the Social Law Library 1,000 ; the Mercantile Library 1,200 ; the Mechanic Apprentices Library about 2,500. The Massachusetts Historical Society has a library of upwards of 2,000 volumes, and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences one of about 1,500. These, together with the other principal societies in the state, hold their meetings here. There are published in Boston, 19 newspapers ; 3 daily, 1 three times a week, 5 twice a week, and 10 once a week ; and 11 other periodical works are published or republished. The citizens are distinguished for their enterprize, intelligence, hospitality, and public spirit ; and for the liberality with which they support humane and charitable objects.

The bridges, which are 5 in number, are objects of particular interest. Charles river bridge, connecting Boston with Charlestown was first opened for passengers in 1786. It is 1,503 feet long, 42 broad, and stands on 75 piers. West Boston bridge, connecting Boston with Cambridge-port, was opened in 1793. It is 3,483 feet long, 40 broad, and stands on 180 piers. South Boston bridge, connecting the main part of the town with South Boston, was constructed in 1805, and is 1,628 feet long, and 42 broad. Craigie's or Canal bridge, connecting Boston with Lechmere's point, was opened in 1809. It is 2,740 feet long, and 56 broad, floored with earth. This bridge, on the Cambridge side, is connected with Charlestown by Prison point bridge, 1,831 feet long. The Mill Dam bridge, forming a grand avenue into Boston from Brookline and Brighton, was begun in 1818, and finished in 1821, and cost about \$600,000. It is constructed of stone and earth, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile long, about 13 feet high, and so broad that 5 carriages may be driven over it abreast. It encloses 2 basins, a full basin consisting of 200 acres, and a receiving basin containing 500 acres. These basins are separated by a cross dam, on which it is contemplated to erect various mills. A large corn mill has been recently finished, and is in successful operation. A water power is created sufficient to put in operation very extensive water works.

The Indian name of Boston was Shawmut. It was settled by the English in 1630, and at first called Tremount or Trimountain, from three hills. It was greatly distinguished for the part it took in the revolution, which originated here. It was styled and governed as a town till 1822, when it was erected into a city, and a representative government was instituted. It is divided into 12 wards, and the elections are now held by wards. It has suffered much by fires; some of the principal of which have happened in 1676, 1679, 1683, 1711, 1760, 1767, 1775, 1787, and 1794. In 1760 happened what is called the great fire, which consumed 174 dwelling houses and 175 other buildings. In 1818, Nov. 3, the exchange, a magnificent brick edifice, of 7 stories, 127 feet long, containing 202 rooms, was burnt.—Benjamin Franklin was born here Jan. 17, 1706.

Boston, (an. Botolph's Town.) t. Eng., in Lincoln; 34 SSE. Lincoln, 115 N. London. Lon. O. 2. W. Lat. 52. 48. N. Pop. in 1801, 5,926; 1811, 8,113. It is nearly surrounded by fens, on the Witham, which is navigable, and forms a port, well frequented, and much assisted by navigable canals. It has 4 annual fairs, and markets on Wednesday and Saturday; during the spring very large for cattle. It has a flourishing trade with the Baltic for hemp, tar, timber, &c. In former periods it stood high as a commercial town. The church is a handsome structure, and serves as a mark to seamen.

Botany Bay, spacious bay on SE. coast of New Holland, the part called New South Wales. Lon. 151. 15. E. Lat. 34. 4. S. It was discovered by Capt. Cook in 1770, and so named from the great variety of plants, hitherto unknown, found here by Sir Joseph Banks and Dr. Solander. The bay appears at first sight to afford perfect shelter and good anchorage, but the water is too shallow for large vessels. It gives name to a settlement, originally projected here, but Sydney, the chief town of the settlement, is on the bay of Port Jackson, some miles distant.

After the separation of the United States from Great Britain, Botany bay was fixed on as a place of exile for English convicts; and the settlement was first formed by the transportation, in 1787, of 760 convicts in 11 vessels. The colony embraces a considerable extent of territory, and is divided into 4 districts, with the chief town of the same name, viz. Sydney, Paramatta, Hawkesbury, and Newcastle. The colony has 2 dependencies, Hobart Town and Port Dalrymple, on Van Diemen's Land, 300 miles distant. Pop. of the colony in 1804, 7,410; in 1810, 11,952; of whom 1,100 were military; in 1817, 20,379; of whom 17,165 were in New Holland, and 3,214 were in Van Diemen's Land. Pop. in 1818, 25,050. In 1808 there were belonging to the colony 55,450 horned cattle, 3,675 horses, 201,242 sheep, 24,822 hogs, and 49,600 acres of land under cultivation. In 1810 the proportion of men to women was nearly as 5 to 2.

The colony has been formed almost wholly of criminals, many of whom, both males and females, have been reclaimed to a virtuous life, and have acquired considerable fortunes. But the general state of society, as might be expected, is deplorable; the colonists are much addicted to intemperance and gaming, and atrocious crimes have been frequent.—Much has been done to promote the comfort of the inhabitants; schools have been instituted; and there are 2 orphan hospitals, one for males, and one for females.

The climate is temperate and healthy. The thermometer in summer sometimes rises to 100 degrees, and in the winter nights there is sometimes hoar frost, but fire is not necessary. Much of the soil is very fertile, interspersed, however, with barren tracts. Wheat, barley, maize, and garden vegetables have been successfully introduced, and the country has proved favourable to domestic animals. No minerals of importance have been found in the vicinity, except iron and coal.—The environs of Botany bay are inhabited by a race of savages, among the lowest in point of civilization any where known.

Bothnia, (East,) pr. formerly belonging to Sweden, but ceded to Russia in 1809, situated on E. side of the gulf of Bothnia, bounded N. by Lapland, E. by the Russian government of Archangel and Olonetz, S. by Finland, and W. by the gulf of Bothnia; about 300 miles in length, and from 60 to 210 in breadth. Towards the S. and on the sea-coast, the land is low and marshy. The summers are often so cold as to destroy great part of the crops. Pop. about 70,000; divided into 28 parishes; spread over this large space; the cattle are small, and bears are numerous. Their salmon fishery is abundant, and that of pearls oftentimes successful. The principal exports are timber, butter, whale oil, pitch, tar, &c. The principal towns are Cajana, or Cajaneborg, Ulea, Christinestadt, &c.

Bothnia, (West,) pr. Sweden, situated on W. side of the gulf of Bothnia, bounded N. and W. by Lapland, S. by Angermania, and E. by the gulf of Bothnia. The country is tolerably fertile, but sudden frosts in the month of July oftentimes destroy the labourer's hopes. There are mines of copper and iron. The principal towns are Umea, Pithea, and Lulea. Pop. about 56,000.

Bothnia, (Gulf of,) sea or large gulf, branching from the Baltic, from which it is separated by the island of Aland, bounded W. by the dominions of Sweden and E. by Finland; about 350 miles from N. to S. and from 50 to 145 broad, from E. to W. Lon. 17. to 25. E. Lat. 60. 20. to 65. 50. N.

Bourbon, (New,) v. Missouri, on W. side of the Mississippi, 2 miles below St. Genevieve.

Bourbon, once called by the Portuguese Marscarehas and Reunion, isl. in the Indian ocean, belonging to France; 100 WSW. Mauritius, 400 E. Madagascar. Lon. 55. 20. E. Lat. 21. S. It is about 48 miles long, and 36 broad. Pop. stated in 1811, at 80,346, of whom 16,400 were whites, 3,496 free people of colour, and 60,450 slaves. The island is composed of two mountains; the smallest is the southern one, in which the volcanic fires are still raging. The volcanic substance, though in a state of perpetual agitation, never rises so high as to issue out of the crater. But from lateral openings it rolls down the sides of the mountain, presenting at a distance the appearance of a fiery cascade, and being seen at a distance at sea, serves as a kind of pharos to mariners.

In the central part are three inaccessible peaks, supposed to have an elevation of 3,200 yards. The mountains give the island at a distance a globular appearance. A great part of it consists of volcanic desert, destitute of vegetation. In other parts the soil is fertile, the air pure, the climate delicious: the sky always beautiful, and the water pure and abundant. The staple production is coffee; other productions, cattle, corn, rice, maize, sugar, also ebony, aloes, palm, benzoin, &c.

Bourbon Lake, lake N. America, composed of the waters of the Bourbon river, which rises a great way to the southward, not far from the northern heads of the Mississippi. It is about 80 miles in length, N. and S., and is nearly circular. The weather here is extremely cold, and few animals are to be found in the country that borders on it. The timber growing here is chiefly fir, cedar, spruce, and some maple, 44, 50. N. Pop. 92,374. H. 7,810. Abp. see. Before the revolution it was the capital of Bourdellois, and of the whole of Guienne. It has 19 gates, 12 of them towards the river, and though not regularly fortified, is surrounded by a wall and several old towers, and has two small forts. The maritime commerce is next to that of Marseilles, the most extended in France, and owed its origin to the spacious harbour formed by the Garonne. The tide rises 12 feet, so that large merchant vessels and frigates can come up close to the town. Its trade in wine and brandy with Britain, Ireland, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, the Hanse Towns, &c., is great. It is computed that 100,000 pipes of wine, and 20,000 of brandy are annually exported by foreigners. It exports various other articles, and has a considerable trade with Spain, Portugal, the United States, and the colonies; also in the whale and cod fisheries.

It contains a cathedral, 46 Cath. chh., 1 Ref. ch., 1 synagogue, a public library of 105,000 vols., an academy, or provincial university with 2 faculties, an academy of sciences, with a library of 20,000 vols., and other public buildings and institutions. The interior of the town is not remarkably handsome, the streets being mostly crooked, narrow, and badly paved; but a number of its edifices are elegant.—Vestiges of Roman grandeur are still to be seen. Native, Ausonius.

Brabant, (Duchy of) country, Netherlands, bounded N. by Holland and Guelderland, E. by Guelderland and Liege, S. by Namur and Hainaut, and W. by Flanders and Zealand. It is about 140 miles in circumference, and contains 26 walled towns, besides others of less consequence. The northern part is covered with moss, heath, and wood, but it is on the whole productive in corn, especially wheat, also in flax and hops; even in ordinary years it produces one-half more grain than the population can consume. In the southern part called Walloon Brabant, a species of corrupted French is spoken; in the northern part the common people speak Flemish; the higher classes throughout pure French.—Brabant was formerly divided into Austrian or Spanish and Dutch Brabant; now into the three following provinces:

Provinces.	Pop.	Sq. m.	Capitals.
North Brabant....	294,111	1,744	Bois le Duc.
South Brabant....	441,422	1,404	Brussels.

Brandenburg, pr. Prussia, bounded N. by Mecklenburg and Pomerania, E. by Posen, S. by the km. of Saxony, SW. and W. by the Prussian province of Saxony. Pop. 1,191,121. Sq. m. 14,909. H. 169,570. Towns 162. Villages 3,241. It is divided into three governments, Berlin, Potsdam, and Frankfort. The inhabitants are chiefly Lutherans; the remainder mostly Calvinists.

The country is mostly level, in some parts sandy, but by good cultivation yields good crops of wheat, rye, barley, oats, flax, hemp, hops, and tobacco; it is likewise rich in wool, wood, and iron. The woods here are of great value, as they furnish the inhabitants with fuel both for domestic use and for glass and iron works. They also yield charcoal, tar, and great quantities of timber for house and ship building; which is exported in part to Holland and France. The breeding of cattle, particularly sheep, is an important branch of employment. Silk is successfully cultivated. There are considerable manufactures of woollen and linen stuffs, leather, and salt. The inland trade is promoted by many navigable rivers and canals. The country is traversed by the Elbe and Oder; also watered by the Havel, Spree, Wartha, Ucker, and Dosse.

Brandenburg, styled the Mark or Marquisate of Brandenburg, was formerly divided into 5 parts, viz. 1. The Altmark, or Old Mark, of which Stendal was the capital; 2. the Middle Mark, containing the towns of Berlin, Potsdam, and Brandenburg; 3. Ucker Mark, of which Prenzlau was the capital; 4. New Mark, of which Custrin was the capital; and 5. Vor Mark, or Mark of Pregnitz, of which Perleberg was the capital. Sq. m. 2,000,000.

Government. Brazil was a colony belonging to Portugal, till 1807, when the royal family of Portugal removed to Rio Janeiro, the capital, and Brazil became an independent kingdom, and so continued till 1821, when the royal family returned to Lisbon. It has since been in a revolutionary state.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Amazon, Madeira, Topayas, Xingu, Tocantins, St. Francisco, Paraguay, Parana, and Uruguay.

Description. There is scarcely to be found on the globe a finer country than Brazil; one blessed with a more genial climate, or a more fertile soil; more happily diversified with wood and water, or with abundance of navigable rivers; or more famed for its precious produce of gold and diamonds. It comprises within its limits almost all the most valued productions of the earth. Viewed from the sea the country appears rugged and mountainous; but on a nearer approach its appearance is highly romantic and picturesque, clothed, as it is, with the most luxuriant vegetation, its hills covered with thick woods, and its valleys with a verdure which never fades. Towards the interior the land rises by gentle gradations to the height of from 3, to 6,000 feet above the level of the sea; and in these temperate regions European fruits and grain are raised in abundance, while the intermediate valleys are extremely favourable to the production of sugar, coffee, and all kinds of tropical produce. A large part of the interior is overspread with an impenetrable forest; the trees closely interwoven with brushwood and shrubs, and covered with creeping plants, adorned with beautiful flowers; thus giving a peculiar and rich appearance to the scenery. The forests abound in a great variety of useful and beautiful wood, adapted for dyeing, cabinet work, and ship building. They contain numerous wild animals.

The climate in the neighbourhood of the Amazon and in the northern parts is hot, but tempered by the humidity of the air; in the southern parts it is temperate and generally healthy.

Gold and diamonds, for which Brazil has been so long celebrated, abound in almost all the higher regions of the interior, and are chiefly found in the beds of the mountain torrents, where the stream is most rapid. Almost all the streams that rise from the chain of mountains that extend through the province of Minas Geraes, are rich, especially near their sources, in gold and diamonds. The towns of St. Paul and Villa Rica, and others in the interior, have grown out of mining establishments. The chief town in the principal diamond district is Tejuco.

Brazza, (an. Brattia), isl. in the Adriatic, about 30 miles long, and 9 broad, near the coast of Dalmatia. Sq. m. 286. Pop. 13,800. It belongs to Austria. Lon. 17. E. Lat. 43. 45. N. Notwithstanding the stony soil of Brazza, it produces a great quantity of wine, which is generally held as the best in Dalmatia; this article, firewood, and sheep, form the principal revenue of the Brazzani. The island also produces oil, figs, almonds, silk, saffron and a little corn. The lentisk grows here in great plenty, and the poor peasants make oil of the berries when there is a scarcity of olives.

Bremen, duchy or pr. Hanover, lying between the Weser and the Elbe, having the German ocean N., and Luneburg and Verden S. These limits include Hadeln, which forms a part of the province. Pop. 168,504; mostly Lutherans. H. 28,979. Sq. m. 2,135. Chief town, Stade. The whole country is entirely level, and in some places so low that it is necessary to secure it from the inundations of the rivers by expensive dikes. The lands bordering on the rivers are very good, and produce abundantly corn, fruit, hemp, and flax, and afford excellent pasture. The central part has an arid soil, but yields plenty of buckwheat, and has excellent sheep walks and turf pits.

Bremen, one of the four free cities, Ger., in the duchy of the same name, on the Weser, about 50 miles above its mouth; 54 SW. Hamburg, 95 NW. Brunswick. Lon. 8. 48. E. Lat. 53. 5. N. Pop. 36,630. H. 5,350. It lies on both sides of the river, which divides it into old and new towns. It has an extensive maritime commerce, although boats only can come up to the town. At Elsfleth, a considerable distance below, is the harbour, which, however, is too shallow to admit large vessels, most of which anchor at Bracke, 4 miles lower. About 200 Bremen ships pass, on an average, through the sound yearly, and about 900, great and small, enter the port. The trade is founded partly on its manufactures of refined sugar, cotton, woolen cloths, dye-stuffs, &c.; but chiefly on the exportation of the products of Westphalia and Lower Saxony, and the importation of foreign goods.

The town is fortified, and is generally well built and paved; the principal street is of great length. The most important public buildings are the cathedral, exchange, and town house. Here is a distinguished academy, founded in 1529, partly Lutheran and partly Calvinist. Calvinism is the prevailing religion, but there are many Lutherans. Bremen was formerly a leading member of the Hanseatic league.—Natives, Olbers and Heeren.—The district belonging to the city includes 75 sq. m. Total pop. 46,300.

Brighton, p-t. Middlesex co. Mass.; $4\frac{1}{2}$ W. Boston. Pop. in 1810, 608; in 1820, 702. It is a pleasant town, and contains a number of elegant country seats.—A cattle fair was begun here during the revolutionary war, and has been increasing since the peace of 1783. Most of the cattle for the supply of Boston market are driven to this place; often from 2, to 3,000, and even 5,000, have come in one week; and sleep also in great numbers.—In 1816, the trustees of the Mass. Agricultural Society commenced a Cattle Show and Exhibition of Domestic Manufactures, which is fixed at this place, and a commodious house, 70 feet by 36, has been erected, for the accommodation of the trustees, and the exhibition of cloths, implements of husbandry, &c.

Brighton, or Brighthelmstone, s-p. Eng., Sussex, at the bottom of a bay formed by Beachy head and Worthing point, in the English channel; 32 E. Chichester, 54 S. London. Lon. 0. 8. W. Lat. 50. 49. N. Pop. in 1801, 7,339; in 1811, 12,012. It is a place of considerable antiquity, but till recently was inhabited only by a few families of fishermen. It has of late rapidly increased, and is now one of the most fashionable places of resort, particularly for sea-bathing, in the kingdom, and during the summer season the population is nearly doubled by the resort of strangers.

It occupies an eminence gently declining towards a lawn, called the Steyne, which is frequented as a promenade. The houses are mostly new, commodious, and elegant, many of them specially adapted to the accommodation of strangers. Baths, hot and cold, of fresh and salt water, and of vapour; also baths after the eastern fashion, are appropriated for the use of both sexes. The sea-bathing is convenient. The promenades and various places of amusement render a residence here particularly agreeable. An elegant mansion, called the Marine Pavilion, was erected, in 1784, for the prince of Wales, near the northwest corner of the Steyne. A handsome front extends 200 feet, with a circular building in the centre, having a lofty dome supported by pillars. Since its original construction, it has been enlarged, and splendidly decorated and furnished within.

Bristol, city, Eng., in the counties of Gloucester and Somerset; 117 W. London. Lon. 2. 35. W. Lat. 51. 27. N. Pop. 76,433. Bp. see. It was called by the Britons the City of Oder in Baden Valley, or Caer Brito, and by the Saxons Brightstowe, or Bristowe. It is situated on an elevated peninsula formed by the rivers Frome and Avon, and was, till recently exceeded by Liverpool, the second city in England for wealth, trade, and population. The quay, esteemed one of the finest in Europe, is one uninterrupted wharf of hewn stone, extending nearly a mile along the inner shores of the Frome and Avon, from St. Giles to Bristol bridge. At flood tides there is sufficient depth of water for vessels of 1,000 tons to ride close to the walls, and discharge their cargoes. The docks are very extensive, and the harbour is capable of accommodating 1,000 vessels. Bristol has extensive commercial connexions with Ireland, and has long carried on a great foreign trade, chiefly with the West Indies.

The city is more than 7 miles in circuit, and the surface occupied by it is computed at about 1,500 acres, over which the buildings are irregularly dispersed in about 600 streets and lanes. Many of the houses in the older part are built of wood and plaster, and are crowded together in narrow and irregular streets; but those of more modern erection are of brick and stone, and are disposed in spacious streets and squares. It contains a cathedral, 17 chh., 5 chapels; about 30 places of public worship for various classes of dissenters; is distinguished for its numerous and well conducted charitable institutions; and has many fine public buildings.—It has considerable manufactories of glass, sugar, various kinds of metals, &c. Its brass works are the most extensive in England. It has also large distilleries. It returns two members to parliament. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.—Chatterton, the poet, was born here, Nov. 22, 1752.

About a mile from the city is the village of the Hot Wells, celebrated for a tepid spring, of a temperature of between 72 and 76 degrees, which has been found a powerful specific in various maladies, but is more frequented, by the fashionable than the valetudinarian.

BRITAIN, commonly called Great Britain, the most considerable island in Europe, between Lat. 50. and 58½. N., bounded N. by the North sea, E. by the German ocean, S. by the English channel, and W. by St. George's channel and the Atlantic ocean. Length from N. to S. 580 miles; greatest breadth from North Foreland in Kent, to Land's end in Cornwall, about 370. In compass its three sides are found to contain, allowing for the windings of the coast, 1,800 miles. Sq. m. 87,502.

Great Britain is composed of England, Wales, and Scotland. Ireland also and the islands adjacent form a part of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The British possess colonies in all quarters of the world; in Europe, Gibraltar, Malta, and Heligoland; in Asia, the whole peninsula of India from Cape Comorin to about Lat. 23. N.; the island of Ceylon, New-Holland, and other islands in the Eastern and Southern oceans; in America, the Canadas, New-Britain, Nova-Scotia, New-Brunswick, Cape Breton, Newfoundland, the Bermudas, a great part of the West Indies, and a part of Guiana; in Africa, the Cape of Good Hope, Sierra Leone, Bathurst, and the islands of St. Helena and Mauritius.

Nobility. There are 5 orders of English nobility, who have a hereditary seat in parliament and hereditary titles; viz. 1. Dukes; 2. Marquises; 3. Earls; 4. Viscounts; 5. Barons. There are also baronets, who have hereditary titles.

Government. The constitution of Great Britain is a hereditary monarchy, in which the power of the sovereign is controuled by the influence of the aristocracy in the house of peers, and by that of the democracy in the house of commons.—The house of lords is composed, 1st, of all the nobility of England who have attained the age of 21 years, and who labour under no disqualification;—number in 1820, 298; viz. 25 dukes, (7 of them royal dukes), 17 marquises, 100 earls, 22 viscounts, and 133 barons;—2ly, of 16 representative peers from Scotland;—3ly, of 28 representative peers from Ireland; and 4ly of 32 spiritual lords, viz. the 2 English archbishops and 24 bishops, and 5 representative Irish bishops: total in 1820, 372.—The house of commons consists of 658 members chosen by counties, cities, and boroughs; 489 are chosen for England, 24 for Wales, 45 for Scotland, and 100 for Ireland.

The ministry is composed of the first lord of the treasury, the chancellor of the exchequer, the 3 secretaries, of foreign affairs, of the home department, and of war; the lord chancellor, the president of the council, the treasurer of the navy, the paymaster of the forces, the commissioners of the treasury, and other persons of high trust. The first lord of the treasury is usually considered the premier, or prime minister. It sometimes happens that the offices of first lord of the treasury, and of chancellor of the exchequer, are held by the same person.—See England, Scotland, &c.

Britain, (Little,) t. Lancaster co. Pa. Pop. 1,700. It borders on Maryland.

Britain, (New,) t. Bucks co. Pa. Pop. 1,082. It is at the head waters of the Neshaminy.

Britain, (New,) vast country, N. A. lying round Hudson's bay, north and north west of Upper and Lower-Canada, comprehending Labrador, New North Wales, and New South Wales; attached to the government of Lower-Canada, and belonging to Great Britain.

The face of the country is various. On the south west of Hudson's bay, from Moose river to Churchill's river, in some parts for the distance of 600 miles inland, the country is flat, marshy, and wooded, in many parts, with pines, birch, larch, and willows. North of Churchill's river, and on the eastern coast, the country is high, rocky, and barren, every where past the efforts of cultivation; covered with masses of rock of amazing size, composed of fruitless valleys and frightful mountains, some of them of great height. The valleys are full of lakes formed by rain and snow, and are covered with stunted trees, pines, fir, birch, and cedar, or juniper. The mountains have here and there a blighted shrub, or a little moss. The climate is extremely severe, and in Lat. 60., on the coast, vegetation ceases.

The principal rivers are Mackenzie's river, Copper-Mine river, Nelson's, Churchill's, Albany, Moose, Seal, Severn, Rupert, and Pokerekesko. The most considerable lakes are Winnipeg, Slave lake, lake of the Hills, and Athapescow.

The principal article of trade is fur. The trade is carried on by two companies; the Hudson's bay company and the North-West company, who employ 4 ships and about 130 seamen, and have several forts, viz. Forts Prince of Wales, Chippeyan, Alexandria, Churchill, Albany, Nelson, Severn, &c.

The wild animals are numerous, such as bears, beavers, deer, musquashes, &c. The Esquimeaux Indians occupy the coasts of Labrador; the interior is inhabited by various tribes of a diminutive and miserable race.—The Moravians have missionary establishments in Labrador.

Britain, (New), isl. in the East-Indian sea, seen by Dampier, Roggewein, and Carteret. Lon. 148. 5. to 50. 55. E. Lat. 1. 30. to 6. 50. S. What Dampier and Roggewein thought was only one island, Capt. Carteret has since found divided into two by a narrow channel, which he sailed through, from SE. to NW., and gave the name of New-Ireland to the most northern. The coasts of New-Britain are high and mountainous, covered here and there with wood. The inhabitants were of a dark copper colour, well made, and hardy; near the southern coast are a number of smaller islands, among which is one with a volcano.

Brownsville, p-t. and bor. Fayette co. Pa., on the Monongahela at the junction of Dunlap's and Red Stone creeks; 12 NW. Union, 25 SE. Washington, 32 SSE. Pittsburg, 55 ESE. Wheeling, 210 NW. Baltimore, W. 215. Pop. 976; and including the borough of Bridgeport, separated only by Dunlap's creek, 1,600. It is situated at the point where the great Cumberland road strikes the head of navigation of the Monongahela; and has long been a place of embarkation for emigrants to the west. The town has a picturesque site, built on the declivity of a hill, and the most elevated houses being about 300 feet higher than those on the river. It contains a bank, a printing office, a masonic hall, and 4 houses of public worship for Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Quakers, and Methodists. The town is built principally of brick and stone. It is situated in a district of country abounding in coal and iron ore, and contains various manufacturing establishments for the manufacture of iron, glass, cotton, cards, nails, wire, flour, &c. Salt water also abounds in the vicinity.

Brownsville, p-t. and cap. Jackson co. Illinois, on the Big Muddy river, 25 miles above its junction with the Mississippi, 12 in a right line E. of the Mississippi, 40 SSE. Kaskaskia, 120 S. Vandalia. It was laid out in 1817, and in 1821, contained a count-house and 25 houses. It is situated in a tract of country very fertile, and covered with wood. Here is a valuable salt spring, and in the vicinity are great quantities of coal. The river is navigable for boats a little above the town. Vestiges of an old furnace and other remains of ancient salt-works are to be seen.

Bruges, city, Neth., capital of West Flanders; 12 E. Ostend, 21 W. Ghent. Lon. 3. 14. E. Lat. 51. 13. N. Pop. in 1806, 32,990; in 1816, 45,000. It is about 4 m. in circ., and advantageously situated in a plain, having, by means of canals, a navigable communication with Ghent, Ostend, Dunkirk, Nieuport, Furnes, Damme, Sluys, &c. This city was in the 14th century one of the greatest places of commerce in Europe. From the year 1489 Bruges began to decline, and Antwerp, so advantageously situated on the banks of a considerable river, became its rival, and soon its superior. Having a communication with the sea from Ostend, by means of a navigable canal, it is yet a place of considerable trade, with manufactures of stuffs, linen, &c. The streets, 260 in number, are in general spacious, and the houses large but old; there are 7 gates and 6 grand markets, but they have neither fountain nor river, the water which supplies the city being brought from Ghent, from the rivers Lys and Scheldt, by means of pipes.

The principal buildings are the town-house, the halls, the exchange, the lyceum, the mint, &c. At the end of the grand market is a fine steeple, one of the most beautiful of the kind in Europe, 533 steps in height, and furnished with bells and chimes, which play a different tune every quarter of an hour. There are several fine churches, but that of Notre-Dame, whose steeple is a sea mark to sailors coming to Ostend, is the most beautiful.

Bp. see. It contains a citadel, 6 parish churches, 3 convents, 3 hospitals, a gymnasium, a Protestant school, and a theatre. It is situated at the conflux of the Schwatschaw and Surtawa, is the seat of the government offices for the whole of Moravia, and has manufactures of fine cloth, silk stuffs, hair cloth, and soap; and is the first commercial town in Moravia. It is defended by a strong fortress called Spilberg, built on an eminence near the town, 816 feet high.

Brunn, circle, Moravia, bounded N. by Bohemia, E. by the circles of Olmutz and Hradisch, S. by Austria, and W. by the circles of Iglau and Znaym. In it are many mines and forges, medicinal springs, quarries of marble, glass-houses, and alum works. Brunn is the capital. Pop. 299,964. H. 51,862. Sq. m. 1,865.

Brunswick, p-t. Cumberland co. Maine, on S. side of the Androscoggin, opposite to Topsham, with which it is connected by a bridge; 7 W. Bath, 26 NE. Portland, 141 NNE. Boston, W. 581. Lon. 69. 55. W. Lat. 43. 53. N. Pop. in 1810, 2,682; in 1820, 2,931. It is a pleasant and flourishing town, and contains a college, a Congregational and a Baptist meeting-house, a printing office, and about 15 trading stores. The falls of the Androscoggin at this place afford water privileges, which are among the best in the country. Here are a cotton and a woollen manufactory, and a number of valuable mills. Logs have been floated down the river to this place even from New Hampshire.—Beautiful emeralds are found in this town.

Bowdoin College, which takes its name from governor Bowdoin, its principal founder, was incorporated in 1794, and organized in 1802. It is a respectable and flourishing institution, having a very healthy and pleasant situation on an elevated plain, about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from the Androscoggin, commanding a view of the village, and of Topsham. The college buildings are a president's house, a chapel, Massachusetts Hall, a brick building 50 feet by 40; and a brick edifice 100 feet long, of 4 stories, containing 32 rooms. [This edifice was burnt March 4, 1822, but by means of funds contributed by friends of the college, it is to be immediately rebuilt.] Another brick edifice of the same dimensions, is also to be erected during the present year (1822). The college has a valuable library of between 5, and 6,000 volumes, an excellent philosophical, and a chemical apparatus, a cabinet of minerals consisting of several thousand specimens, and a collection of 70 pieces of valuable paintings by Rubens, Vandyke, and other masters.

The legislative government is entrusted to a board of 25 trustees and 60 overseers. The executive government, exclusively of the medical department, is composed of a president, 2 professors, one of mathematics, natural philosophy, chemistry, and mineralogy, and one of languages; and two tutors. The number of undergraduates, in 1822, was 118.—Commencement is held on the Wednesday preceding the last Wednesday in August. There are 3 vacations; the 1st, from commencement 4 weeks; the 2d, from the Wednesday before the last Wednesday in December, 7 weeks; the 3d, from the 2d Wednesday in May, 2 weeks.

The Medical School of Maine, which is connected with the college, first went into operation in 1821. The number of medical students, in 1822, was forty-nine. There are 3 professors; more are contemplated. The lectures commence about the middle of February and continue 3 months. From the means which this institution possesses, it will be able in a few years to afford great advantages to students.—In 1820 the state legislature passed an act granting for ten years $3,000 annually to the college, and $1,000 to the medical school.

Brunswick, (New,) city, N. J., partly in Middlesex and partly in Somerset co., on SW. side of the Raritan, 17 miles by the course of the river above Raritan bay, 12 W. Amboy, 16 NE. Princeton, 33 SW. New-York, 56 NE. Philadelphia, W. 194. Lon. 74. 23. W. Lat. 40. 30. N. Pop. in 1810, 3,042; including the township, 6,312; in 1820, 6,764. Dwelling houses in the city in 1810, 375; in 1818, 520. It contains a court house, a jail, a market house, 2 banks, a college, a theological seminary, and 5 houses of public worship, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Dutch Reformed, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Methodists. A considerable part of the town is situated rather low, but it is accounted healthy, and has considerable trade. The exports consist chiefly in grain. The Raritan is navigable as far as this place for sloops of 80 tons. Here is a bridge across the river.

Queen's College was founded in this place by the ministers of the Dutch Reformed church, in 1770. The building is a handsome and spacious stone edifice, 3 stories high, but is yet unfinished. The exercises of this college, however, have, for some time past, been suspended, but a grammar school is now kept in the college edifice; the building has also been granted by the trustees of the college (to be resumed at their option) to accommodate a theological seminary of the Dutch church, which was established here in 1811. It has 2 professors, 1 of didactic theology, and of ecclesiastical history and pastoral theology, and in 1818, 16 students. The library contains 7, or 800 volumes. The mode of instruction is by lectures. The lectures commence early in November and end the latter part of May. The course of education in this seminary embraces the lectures for 3 years.

Brunswick, t. Medina co. Ohio. Pop. 172.

Brunswick, duchy, Ger., in Lower Saxony, surrounded by the Prussian dominions and Hanover. The territories are irregular and scattered. The rivers are the Weser, Ocker, Leine, and Ilmenau. Sq. m. 1,520. Pop. 209,275, of whom 205,262 are Lutherans, 1,046 Calvinists, 2,072 Catholics, 99 Moravians, and 1,048 Jews. H. 26,724. Towns 12. Chief towns, Brunswick, the capital, Wolfenbittel, Helmstadt, Halzminden, Blankenburg, Gandersheim, and Konigsutter.

The climate is temperate, the soil in the northern part particularly, is fertile, producing grain, pulse, fruits, flax, hops, tobacco, &c. There are several mines, mineral springs, and large forests, with an abundance of game.

The house of Brunswick is one of the oldest in Germany. In the 16th century duke Ernest of Zell united the possessions of the house of Brunswick, which had been divided into several independent states, under one head; but after his death they were divided again, his eldest son, Henry, founding the duchy of Brunswick-Wolfenbittel, and his youngest son, William, that of Brunswick-Luneburg. The former is styled the duchy of Brunswick; the latter forms the basis of the kingdom of Hanover.

Brunswick, city, Ger., capital of the duchy of the same name, and residence of the duke, situated on the Ocker; 7 N. Wolfenbittel, 47 WNW. Magdeburg. Lon. 10. 30. E. Lat. 52. 16. N. Pop. 29,050. H. 3,182. The form is nearly square, and measures 2 miles in circumference; it contains 5 or 6 squares, and a number of handsome buildings, among which are the town-house, 9 Lutheran chh., 1 Calvinist, 1 Catholic, a synagogue, 2 gymnasias, an opera-house, a theatre, a custom-house, and the celebrated Collegium Carolinum, with 20 professors, founded in 1745, and affords instruction in the languages, arts, and sciences, and has a well furnished library.—Brunswick was formerly one of the Hanse towns, and governed as a republic.

Two great fairs, which rank next to those of Leipsic and Franckfort, are held here annually, one in winter, the other in summer, and both continuing 18 days. The summer fair begins on the Monday after St. Lawrence's day; and the winter fair on the Monday after Candlemas. The trade is not however confined to the two fairs, for the traffic for flax and yarn is at all times very great; and the hops growing in the neighbourhood are a source of great riches. Natives, Meibom, Henke, &c.

Brunswick, (New.) one of the four British provinces of N. A., bounded N. by Lower Canada and Chaleur bay, S. by Nova Scotia and the bay of Fundy, and W. by Maine; about 200 miles long, and 160 broad. Pop. estimated a few years since at 60,000. The chief towns, are Fredericktown, the capital, St. John's and St. Andrew's. The principal rivers are the St. John's, Magegadavick, Diewasset, St. Croix, Merimichi, Petitcodiac, and Memramcook. The bays are bay of Fundy, Passamaquoddy, Chignecto, and Chaleur.

The St. John's, which is much the largest river, opens into a vast extent of fine country, on which are rich meadow lands, most of which are settled. The upland is generally well timbered. Near the margin of the numerous rivers, creeks, and lakes, the country is for the most part covered with inexhaustible forests of pine, spruce, hemlock, birch, maple, elm, fir, and other timber, proper for masts of any size, lumber, and ship-building. The sea-coast abounds with cod and scale fish, and immense shoals of herring, shad, and salmon, annually enter its rivers. In the interior the lands are generally excellent, and productive where cultivated, but great advances have not yet been made in agriculture. The principal exports are lumber and fish; also horses, salted provisions, and butter.

Brussels is the second city in size in the Netherlands after Amsterdam, the capital of the southern provinces, one of the residences of the king, and one of the most elegant and splendid cities in Europe. It was formerly surrounded by a double wall and ditch, but these were destroyed by the emperor Joseph II. The ramparts were planted with rows of trees, and now form most beautiful walks around the city; its circumference is 7 miles, and it has 7 gates. The lower part of the town is irregular and somewhat unhealthy; but the more modern streets which are built in the other part, are wide and straight; the private houses lofty and elegant, and the public structures magnificent. The city contains 7 parish chh., 8 public squares, an athenæum, or university, a royal college, an academy of sciences, a school of medicine, a botanic garden containing more than 4,000 exotics, an extensive collection of paintings, a cabinet of natural history, and a public library of about 100,000 vols.

The great market place is a regular parallelogram, and has on each side a succession of elegant buildings. Among the magnificent edifices of the city are the Hotel de Ville, the church of St. Gudule, the chapel of Notre Dame, the church of the Capuchins, and the opera house. There are many mansions or palaces of noblemen, and 20 fountains, embellished with sculptures. The Hotel de Ville is a handsome gothic edifice, completed in 1442, having a turret 364 feet in height surmounted with a gigantic figure of St. Michael in copper, gilt, 17 feet high, which turns with the wind. But the chief ornaments of Brussels are its public walks; no city in Europe possesses one superior to that called the Green Alley, or to that styled the Park, which is a great interior square, and a kind of public garden, intersected by beautiful alleys bordered with trees, and surrounded on its 4 sides with elegant buildings. The palace formerly occupied by the governor of the Austrian Netherlands was burnt in 1813; and in 1817 it was decreed that a new palace should be built for the king of the Netherlands at the expense of between 3 and 4 millions of florins.—No city in Europe, except Naples and Genoa, makes a finer appearance at a distance.

The manufactures of Brussels are celebrated throughout Europe, particularly its lace, camlets, carpets, and carriages; the first alone employs 10,000 individuals. It carries on considerable trade not only with the interior of the Netherlands, but with foreign countries, by means of canals, which bring it into communication with the Scheldt, the principal one leading to Antwerp.—Natives, Champagne, Meulen, and Helmont.

Buda, or Offen, or Ofen, (an. Acincum, Aquini, and Sicambria,) city, Hungary, the capital of the kingdom, being the residence of the viceroy, in the county of Pest, on the Danube, opposite to Pest; 125 ESE. Vienna, 150 NNW. Belgrade. Lon. 19. 2. E. Lat. 47. 30. N. Pop. in 1815, 22,527. H. 2,903. Pop. in 1819, stated at 27,000. Greek bp. see. It is situated on the west bank of the Danube, and consists of four parts; 1. the Upper Town, which is fortified, and is situated, with its magnificent royal castle, on a rocky hill; 2. the Lower Town, or Waterstadt, which lies at the foot of the hill, well built, and having a communication by an immense bridge of boats across the river with Pest; 3. the Neustift, where is the remarkable Trinity Pillar, 52 feet high; 4. the Taban, or Raitzenstadt, peopled by Rascians.

Buda contains 1 Greek and 4 Catholic chh., a theatre, an observatory, 2 high schools, and a Catholic gymnasium, which had, in 1817, 375 students. The university of Tirnau was removed to this place in 1777, but in 1784, was transferred to Pest. The palace belonging to the Esterhazy family, which stands on a rock above the Danube, exhibits from its balcony a most extensive prospect of the country. The warm baths of Buda, 5 in number, are magnificent, and useful in paralytic and other complaints.—The environs produce excellent red wine.—In 1810, the greater part of the Taban and a portion of the Waterstadt, 600 houses, were burnt; but they have since been rebuilt in an improved style.—This town is sometimes called New Buda, to distinguish it from Altofen, or Old Buda, a decayed town, a little above, on the Danube.

Population. The population is uncertain, and variously estimated. Humboldt states it at 1,100,000, and a writer in the London Monthly Magazine at 3,000,000. The above table is taken from Brackenridge. Several provinces are not included, and the Indian population is omitted. The whole population, including 700,000 civilized Indians, he estimates at 2,000,000. The Indians possess the northern and middle parts of the country, as much as one half of the whole; but their numbers are unknown.

Face of the country. The great range of the Andes extends along on the western side, and the western and northern parts are mountainous. The country bordering on the La Plata and its branches is generally level or undulating. The southern division forms a part of a vast plain or pampa, which stretches south into Patagonia, extending about 1,500 miles in length, and 500 in breadth, having few interruptions from wood or from any eminence; covered with tall waving grass, affording pasture to innumerable herds of cattle and wild horses.

Rivers. This country is watered by the great river La Plata and branches, the Uruguay, Parana, Paraguay, Pilcomayo, Salado, Vermejo, &c. Titicaca is the largest lake.

Soil and productions. A large portion of the soil is very fertile, adapted to the growth of wheat, maize, barley, tobacco, sugar, wine, fruits, &c., but agriculture is much neglected. A great part of the wealth of the country consists in the immense herds of cattle and horses that graze on its plains. The principal exports are hides, tallow, beef, gold, and silver.

Mines. Several years since there were in operation 30 mines of gold, 27 of silver, 7 of copper, 7 of lead, and 2 of tin. The silver mine of Potosi is the richest in S. America.

Climate. The climate differs in different parts, but is generally healthy. On the plains the atmosphere is moist, and in summer the heat is excessive, with frequent rains, accompanied by the most dreadful thunder and lightning.

Buenos Ayres, pr. S. America, bounded N. by Yapizlaga and Paraguay, E. by Brazil and the sea, S. by the sea and the country of Magellan, and W. by the provinces of Cordova and Tucuman. The climate is healthy and temperate, the difference between the winter and summer is very perceivable; in the summer the air is serene, and the heat would be excessive, if not moderated by a wind which blows every morning. In the winter, storms are very frequent, with rain, and dreadful lightning and thunder.

Buenos Ayres, or Nuestra Sennora de Buenos Ayres, city, S. A. and capital of the country to which it gives name, on SW. side of the La Plata, 66 leagues from its mouth, first built in the year 1535. Lon. 58. 31. W. Lat. 34. 35. S. Pop. according to Mr. Bland, 47,184; according to Brackenridge the city and vicinity, including 10 miles square, contains about 70,000 inhabitants. About one fourth of the inhabitants are whites, the rest are Indians, negroes, and mixed breeds. The situation is agreeable and healthy, and the city derives its name from the salubrity of its climate. The temperature is nearly the same throughout the year. The city is built with great regularity, and the principal streets are straight and regular, and some of them are paved. They are broad, with side walks, but from the great scarcity of stone, are generally unpaved in the middle. The houses are mostly built of brick or chalk, with flat roofs, many of them of two stories, though the greater part of only one. They are generally plastered on the outside, but now appear somewhat shabby. The public buildings are a palace, a royal chapel, a cathedral, a college, 2 hospitals, 4 monasteries, 2 nunneries, 10 or 15 churches, a public library of nearly 20,000 volumes, an academy, and 8 public schools. Some of these public buildings are large and splendid.

There is no harbour at Buenos Ayres, nor so much as a mole to facilitate the landing of boats; the ships can only come within 3 leagues of the town; there they unload their goods into boats, which enter a little river, named Rio Chuelo, from whence the merchandise is brought in carts to the town, which is about a quarter of a league from the landing place. The ships which want careening, or take loading, at Buenos Ayres, go to the bay of Baragon, a kind of port about twelve miles SE. of the town.—The environs of this city are well cultivated; most of the inhabitants have their country houses, there called quintas; furnishing all the necessaries of life in abundance, except wine, which they get from Spain, or from Mendoza.—Wood is very dear at Buenos Ayres, and at Monte-Video. In the neighbourhood of these places are only some little shrubs, hardly fit for fuel. All timber for building houses and constructing and refitting the vessels that navigate in the river, comes from Paraguay in rafts.

Buffalo, p-t. port of entry, and cap. Niagara co. N. Y., at the east end of lake Erie, at the efflux of Niagara river, 22 S. Niagara Falls, 80 ENE. Erie, 240 E. Sandusky, 220 NNE. Pittsburg, 290 W. Albany, W. 431. Pop. in 1810, 1,508; in 1820, 2,095. The village of Buffalo is situated on Buffalo creek or river, near its mouth, is pleasant and flourishing; containing a court-house, jail, bank, and 2 printing offices. Being situated on the channel of communication between the Atlantic and the lakes, at the point where the great western canal joins lake Erie, it may be expected to become a great emporium of commerce. At Black Rock, 2 miles below Buffalo, is the present harbour for vessels. Buffalo river has sufficient depth of water for a harbour, being 12 or 14 feet, 1 mile from its mouth; but is somewhat obstructed by sand; this difficulty it is proposed to remedy by constructing a pier and mole.—This village, consisting of upwards of 100 houses, was burnt by the British during the late war, but it has since been rebuilt, and contained in 1820, about 200 houses.—Bordering on the township is the Buffalo reservation, a tract containing 83,557 acres of land, belonging to the Seneca Indians. The number of Indians on this tract is 686.

Bukharia, Bukhara, Bokhara, (Great,) said to signify the Country of Learned Men, country, Asia, forming a part of Tartary, anciently called Sogdiana, and Bactria. Its extent and boundaries are not well defined, but seems to be bounded N. and W. by Karasm and Turkestan, E. by Little Bukharia, and S. by Persia and North Hindoostan; about 700 miles long, from N. to S., and 350 broad. It includes the three provinces or parts, Bukharia Proper, Samarcand, and Balk, but its limits, extent, and divisions are variously stated, and not well ascertained. A part of it is included in the kingdom of Cabulistan. The principal towns are Bukharia, Samarcand, Balk, Badakshan, Anderrab, Osrushnah, Termed, and Gaur.—The rivers are the Jihon, Sirr, Amu, Oxus, and Sogd.

A considerable portion of the country consists of flat sandy desert; there are several chains of mountains, from which torrents descend, and gold is generally found in their channels. There are other valuable mineral products, as rubies, lapis lazuli, marble, &c. The valleys are well watered, enjoy a genial climate, and when cultivated produce abundant harvests.

This country is inhabited by two distinct races, the Taujiks and Usbecks. The Taujiks, Tajiks, or Taujets, a name said to signify citizens, are of common stature, fair complexion, with black expressive eyes, hawk nose, well shaped face, fine black hair, and thick beard; the women beautiful. Their occupations are agriculture, mechanic arts, and trade. The Usbecks have long been reputed the most civilized of the Mahometan Tartars. They are short and stout; their complexion clear and ruddy, hair black, beard thin, forehead broad, cheek bones high, and eyes small. They are brave, surprisingly patient of hunger, thirst, and fatigue, and renowned for the activity of their movements in predatory war. They lead a pastoral life, and their favorite food is horse flesh.—Bukharia is famous for its literature, the cities of Bukharia and Samarcand having long been principal schools of oriental science.

Bukharia, Bukhara, or Bogar, city, Asia, capital of Great Bukharia, on the Sogd; 100 W. Samarcand. About Lon. 61. 58. E. Lat. 39. 20. N. Pop. stated at upwards of 100,000. It is situated on a rising ground, and is surrounded by a slender wall of earth and a dry ditch. The houses are low, and for the most part built of mud; but the numerous mosques and caravansaries are of stone or brick. The manufactures are cotton yarn, calicoes, and soap. The trade, which was once very considerable, declined towards the middle of the last century. It is still carried on in various articles, and foreign merchants are encouraged, and all religions tolerated. The climate is agreeable, yet the inhabitants are afflicted during summer with a complaint resembling the Guinea worm, and the city is infested by serpents and scorpions.

The inhabitants are characterised as being more civilized than those of the neighbouring countries, and the city has long been celebrated for the study of Mahometan theology and law; and it contains many colleges capable of accommodating from 60 to 600 students each.

Bukharia, (Little), country, Asia, having the country of Calmucks and Eygur N., Chinese Tartary and the desert of Cobi E., Thibet S. and Great Bukharia W.; about 700 miles from E. to W., and 200 from N. to S. The country is but little known, and its limits not well defined, and it is by some stated to be considerably larger.—The principal towns, are Yarkan, Kashgar, Koton, Aksu, Tourfan, and Hami.

The climate is temperate. The country lies amidst deserts, and consists, in great part, of a vast chain of mountains; and grain and fruits are not abundant. The plains at the foot of the mountains are said to be fertile, producing a plenty of various kinds of fruits, particularly melons of a fine quality, and in great request in China. The mineral productions are gold, silver, and precious stones. The natives are in a low state of civilization; of swarthy complexion, black hair, some of them handsome; live partly in stone houses and partly in tents; have neither tables nor chairs, use no knives or forks in eating; their usual beverage tea; practise polygamy; each wife is purchased from her parents; marriage is dissolved at pleasure; and the religion is Mahometanism.

Bulgaria, (Little,) anciently Mæsia Inferior, pr. Eu. Turkey, bounded N. by the Danube, E. by the Black sea, S. by mount Hæmus, and W. by Servia. The country is full of mountains, barren at the top but fertile in pasturage at the bottom; and the intervening valleys and plains produce a great deal of corn and wine. The inhabitants are for the most part Christians, but exceedingly ignorant: they reckon among them one patriarch and 3 archbishops, all under the authority of the patriarch of Constantinople. They speak the Slavonic language. They are descendants from the Bulgarii, from whom the country takes its name. The province is divided into 4 districts, Sophia, Widdén, Nicopoli, and Silistria, each named from its chief town. Pop. stated from 1,500,000 to 1,800,000. Sophia is the capital.

Burgundy, (Circle of), one of the 10 circles of the German empire, erected in 1512, by Maximilian. At its original formation it was very extensive, and comprised, besides the free county (Franche Comté), of Burgundy, the whole 17 provinces of the Netherlands. But after the Dutch provinces declared their independence, and the southern part of the circle was acquired by France, it consisted only of the Spanish or Austrian Netherlands.

Burgundy, called also Burgundy Proper, or Lower Burgundy, to distinguish it from Franche Comté, or Upper Burgundy, before the revolution, a province of France, including Bresse, Bugey, and Gex ; near 150 miles in length, and more than 90 broad ; bordered E. by Franche Comté, S. by Lyonnois, W. by Bourbonnois and Nivernois, and N. by Champagne. The Dijonnois, Auxerrois, Auxois, Autunois, Charolois, Briennes, Chalons, and Maconois, which take their names from the several towns, were included in this province. Dijon was the capital. It is very fertile, and the wines are much esteemed. It now forms the departments of Aube, Côte-d'Or, Saône-and-Loire, and Yonne.

Burlington, p-t. port of entry, and cap. Chittenden co. Vt., on a bay of the same name on lake Champlain ; 24 SSE. Plattsburg, 32 N. Middlebury, 38 WNW. Montpelier, 70 N. Whitehall, 100 S. Montreal, 198 NW. Boston, W. 501. Lon. 73. 15. W. Lat. 44. 28. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,690 ; in 1820, 2,111. The village is very finely situated, lying in the form of a parallelogram, having its shortest side on the lake, 100 rods in length ; the other extending back up a gradual ascent, a mile from the water. It contains a court house, a jail, a bank, 2 printing offices, an academy, a university, 2 handsome Congregational meeting houses, one of which is an elegant brick building ; 165 dwelling houses, and 50 stores, offices, and mechanics' shops. Within the township, 1½ NE. from the centre of the village, there is another village of about 30 houses, at the falls of Onion river. These falls afford conveniences for extensive manufacturing establishments. Here are a woollen manufactory, a paper mill, an oil mill, a plaster mill, 2 saw mills, and a grist mill. Burlington is a flourishing town, of more commercial importance, than any other in Vermont. About 10 sloops, of from 70 to 100 tons, which navigate the lake, are owned here. Two weekly newspapers are published at this place.

The University of Vermont was incorporated in 1791. The college edifice is a spacious and elegant brick building, 4 stories high, 160 feet long, 75 wide in the central part, and 45 on the wings, containing a chapel, 7 rooms for public uses, and 46 for students. It is finely situated on the east side of the village, one mile distant from lake Champlain, on an elevation, according to Capt. Partridge, of 245 feet above the surface of the water, and commands an extensive and delightful prospect of the lake, with its islands, of the high mountains along the western shore, and the surrounding country. The library contains 8, or 900 volumes. The philosophical apparatus is tolerably complete. The funds of the institution consist chiefly in lands, amounting to about 30,000 acres; of which only about 6,400 acres are as yet leased.

The board of trustees is composed of the governor of the state, the speaker of the house of representatives, and the president of the university, ex officio, together with 15 gentlemen chosen by the legislature, and holding their offices 9 years, but capable of a reappointment. The executive government consists of a president and 6 professors; 1 of languages, 1 of mathematics and natural philosophy, 1 of surgery and the theory and practice of physic, 1 of anatomy and physiology, 1 of chemistry and pharmacy, and 1 of botany and materia medica. The number of undergraduates, in 1821, was 35.

The commencement is on the 2d Wednesday in August. There are only two vacations; one from commencement, 4 weeks; the other from the 2d Wednesday in December, 9 weeks.

The exercises of this institution were suspended for two years during the late war, and the students were all dismissed. In August 1815 it was reorganized.

Bursa, or Brusa, (an. Prusa, or Prusia,) city, A. Turkey, in Natolia, capital of a sangiac; 60 S. Constantinople. Lon. 29. 12. E. Lat. 40. 11. N. Pop. variously stated from 40,000, to 120, or 130,000. It is situated on a spacious plain at the foot of mount Olympus, and, including the suburbs, is about 6 miles in circuit. It is surrounded with walls, and occupies eminences on each side of a height, which is surmounted by a castle. The castle, supposed to be the ancient city of Prusa, is about a mile in circ., environed by a wall, which indicates its erection at a very remote period. Springs rise in various parts of the city, some medicinal, and some hot, and here are baths in great repute.

It is one of the finest cities in Natolia, and contains 366 mosques, 3 Greek churches, 1 Armenian, and 4 synagogues, and it is the seat of a Greek and an Armenian archbishop. The inhabitants consist of Turks, Greeks, Armenians, and Jews. The manufactures are carpets, satins, silk stuffs, gauze, &c. The bazars are filled with various kinds of merchandise, and the caravans, which go from Aleppo and Smyrna to Constantinople, add much to its commerce. It was the capital of the Turkish empire previous to 1452, when the seat of government was transferred to Constantinople.—Native, the physician Asclepiades.

Cabul, city, capital of Cabulistan, and of a province of the same name, with two castles and a palace, situated at the foot of the Hindoo Koo mountain, on the river Kameh; 176 ENE. Candahar, 580 NW. Delhi. Lon. 68. 35. E. Lat. 34. 30. N. This city is at present the residence and capital of the Abdalli sovereigns of Cabulistan. It stands in a wide plain, well watered, and interspersed with walled villages. The river Kameh, or Cabul, runs through the plain, over which, at the distance of 3 or 4 miles south of the city, is a bridge built of brick. It is surrounded by a wall $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile in circuit. The houses are built of rough stones, clay, and unburnt bricks, and make a very mean appearance. The town carries on a great trade with Tartary and the Indies. The Usbecks bring a great number of horses, and the Persian sheep and cattle, to be sold here.

Cabul, (Little), t. Cabulistan; 10 E. Cabul.

CABULISTAN, or Afghanistan, sometimes also called Candahar, km. Asia, comprising the eastern part of Persia, the western part of Hindoostan, and the southern part of Tartary, bounded N. by Tartary, E. by Hindoostan, S. by the Arabian sea, and W. by Persia. With these limits it includes Beloochistan, which is by some considered a distinct kingdom. The principal divisions or provinces are Cabul, Candahar, Balk, Cashmere, Herat, Segestan, Moulton, and the country of Beloochistan. But the extent and limits of the country are not well defined, and the authority of the king over some of the above divisions is merely nominal. It is a modern kingdom, and the political state of some portions of it is uncertain and fluctuating.

Cities. The principal cities are Cabul, the capital, Candahar, Cashmere, Herat, Peshawar, Moulton, Balk, Zareng, Ghizni, Bamian, Ferah, Gaur, and Kelat.

Population. The population is stated by Mr. Elphinstone at 14,000,000; of whom 5,700,000 are Hindoos, 4,300,000 Afghans, 1,500,000 Parsees, 1,400,000 Belooches, and 1,200,000 Tartars.

Face of the country and soil. The face of the country is greatly diversified, with mountains, valleys, and sandy deserts. In well watered valleys the soil is very fertile; but there are extensive barren wastes. The Himmaleh mountains are in the northern part, and are always covered with snow. See Afghanistan and Beloochistan.

Cadiz, (an. Gades and Gadir,) city and s-p. Spain, Andalusia, in Seville ; 45 NW. Gibraltar, 60 SW. Seville. Lon. 6. 17. W. Lat. 36. 32. N. Pop. 70,000. H. 8,000. Bp. see. It is situated at the extremity of the tongue of land which projects from an insulated tract at the mouth of the Gaudalete, called the island of Leon. The city communicates with the rest of the island by a road nearly 5 miles long. Its form is nearly a square of $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile ; is walled, and has trenches and bastions on the land side. The streets are generally clean, well paved, and lighted, but in some parts narrow ; the houses high with small windows, and of rather gloomy appearance. They are generally white-washed and painted yellow. The harbour is commodious. The bay of Cadiz is one of the finest in the world, being from 10 to 12 leagues in circ., with excellent anchoring ground, defended by 4 forts, and is the grand rendezvous of the Spanish navy. The city and country seats in the neighborhood make a fine appearance, viewed from the harbour.—Cadiz is the most important commercial town in Spain, and is the centre of the trade with America, being the seat of the great public board for American affairs since 1726. The imports consist of gold and silver, (amounting in 1792, quoted as an average year, to £5,500,000 sterling), cocoa, tobacco, sugar, vanilla, &c. The exports to America consist of hardware, linen, woollens, wine, oil, almonds, raisins, wax, cinnamon, paper, books, and medicines. Great quantities of salt are prepared in the vicinity of this city. The inhabitants of Cadiz, are mostly employed in commerce ; the manufactures are insignificant. The want of good water is one of the greatest inconveniences of the place.

Caen, (an. Cadonum, and Cathom,) city, France, cap. Calvados, on the rivers Orne and Odon ; 26 posts W. Paris. Lon. 0. 22. W. Lat. 49. 11. N. Pop. 35,638. H. 8,000. It contains 13 chh., 3 hospitals, an academy of sciences, a public library, and a museum. Before the revolution, it was the capital of Lower Normandy, with a celebrated university, first founded by Henry VI. king of England, at that time nominally king of France, in the year 1431, for the study of civil and canon law. The university fell into neglect at the revolution, but has been since revived under the title of an academy. It is surrounded by a high wall, flanked with 21 towers, and is well built, the houses being constructed of white stone. The manufactures consist of linens, serges, lace, stockings, and caps. An active trade is carried on in these articles, as well as in cider, dye-stuffs, skins, cattle, and horses. The town is 7 or 8 miles above the mouth of the Orne, and vessels of 160 tons ascend to it.—Natives, Malherbe, Segrais, and Huet.

Caerleon, t. Eng., in Monmouth, on the Usk ; 148 W. London. Lon. 3. 21. W. Lat. 51. 39. N. Pop. 936. It was once the metropolis of all Wales; and an abp. see from the first establishment of Christianity in the island. King Arthur is said to have kept his court, and to have instituted the order of the knights of the round table, in this place. It is now much reduced from its former grandeur. It has yet 2 markets, on Thursday and Saturday.

Caermarthen, or Caermarden, (an. Maridunum), t. S. Wales, and capital of the county to which it gives name, on the river Gwilly, about 10 miles from the Bristol channel, and near the river Towy; 45 W. Brecon, 212 W. London. Lon. 4. 22. W. Lat. 52. 14. N. Pop. 7,275. It was anciently surrounded with walls, and defended by a castle, the gate of which now serves for a county jail. It is esteemed the best built town in S. Wales. Its trade is considerable, and its chief manufactures are tin plate and iron. It sends one member to parliament, and has markets weekly, on Wednesday and Saturday.

Caermarthenshire, co. S. Wales, bounded N. by the county of Cardigan, from which it is separated by the river Tivy, E. by Brecknockshire and Glamorganshire, S. by the Bristol Channel, and W. by Pembrokeshire; about 45 miles long, and 20 broad. Sq. m. 926. Acres 590,640; 228,000 of pasturage; 114,600 of tillage, the rest unfit for cultivation. Pop. 77,217. Families 16,083; 9,878 engaged in agriculture; 5,256 in trade and manufactures; 949 otherwise. The country is in general mountainous, woody, and well watered. The air is reckoned mild and healthy, and the soil fertile. Coals and limestone are plentiful.

Caernarvon, t. Berks co., Pa. Pop. 829.

Caernarvon, (an. Segontium, or Seguntio), s-p. N. Wales, and capital of the county to which it gives name, by the side of the river Menai, with a castle; 9 SSW. Bangor, 253 NW. London. Lon. 4. 30. W. Lat. 53. 6. N. Pop. 4,595. The walls are defended by a number of round towers, with two principal gates; the E. facing the mountains, and the W. facing the Menai. The town is well built, and the harbour tolerable, capable of receiving vessels of 700 tons, but of difficult access. It carries on considerable trade with London, Bristol, Liverpool, and Ireland. The exports are copper ore, and slates, also flannels and stockings. It sends one member to parliament; has hot and cold baths. Market on Saturday.

Caernarvonshire, co. N. Wales, bounded N. by the sea, E. by Denbighshire, S. by Merionethshire and the sea, and W. by the Irish sea and the Menai. Its length from N. to S. about 40 miles, its breadth from E. to W. 20. Sq. m. 775. Pop. 49,336. Families 10,187; 6,667 engaged in agriculture; 2,687 in trade and manufactures; 833 otherwise. It is esteemed the most mountainous county in Wales, and includes Snowdon, the most elevated mountain in that country, it is divided into 7 hundreds, and contains one city, viz. Bangor, and 5 market-towns, Aberconway, Caernarvon, Pwllhelly, Crickeith, and Nevin.

Caerphilly, see Caerfilly.

Caerwent, or Caer Gwent, or Caer Went, (an.

Venta Silurum), v. Eng. in Monmouth; 17 NW. Bristol, 24 ESE. Cardiff. Pop. 375. In the time of Caradoc of Inir, it flourished as a university. The remains give evidences of former magnificence.

Caerwys, t. N. Wales, in Flintshire, formerly a city of note, and the county town; 5 W. Flint, 204 NW. London. Lon. 3. 32. W. Lat. 53. 14. N. Pop. 863. The chief boast of the town was its being the place where the British bards met annually, at a particular period, for trials of skill. Caerwys joins in sending one member to parliament, and has a market on Tuesday.

Caes, (Dos), three small islands in the Atlantic, near S. coast of Portugal. Lon. 7. 52. W. Lat. 36. 58. N.

Cæsaraugusta, now Saragossa.

Cæsarea, or Cæsarea of Palestine, s-p. Syria, in the pachalic of Damascus; 25 N. Jaffa. Lon. 35. 2. E. Lat. 32. 23. N. It was once a city of great celebrity, and the seat of the Roman governors of Palestine. It was first called Strabo's Tower. It was enlarged by Herod; the streets were beautified and widened; palaces, built of marble, arose from the ancient ruins; and theatres, amphitheatres, and other edifices, were constructed, which, as they stood towards the sea, were beheld by navigators with astonishment. Nothing now remains of the temples built by Herod, but the ruins of a few walls, and part of a fortress which stood near it. Some porphyry columns lie scattered here and there; and within the city may be seen the ruins of a few edifices constructed of white marble, which, by the injuries of the weather, have now become totally black. The situation of the ancient port, which several historians have extolled as another wonder of the world, cannot be distinguished. The city is now a pile of ruins without an inhabitant.

Caffra, t. Egypt; 2 E. Siut.

Caffraria, country, Africa; in its most extensive sense it comprehends all southern Africa, from the cape of Good Hope, to Benguela on the west, and to Mosambique on the east. But in a more limited sense, it is confined to that portion of country inhabited by a native people called Caffres, or Koussis; extending along the eastern coast upwards of 200 miles from the great Fish river, which separates it from the colony of the cape of Good Hope, to Key's river, which divides it from the country of the Tambookies.

The Caffres differ in various respects from the Hottentots, the bordering race. They are tall, robust, muscular, of handsome figure; and though black, or nearly so, have not a line of the African negro; their countenance is always cheerful. They are more addicted to agriculture than the Hottentots. Millet and a very large species of water melons are their principal culinary plants. Pasturage is, however, a much more favorite and general occupation. But they have no horses, sheep, or goats; cattle being almost their sole possession; some of their oxen and cows are of remarkable size. Their clothes are made of calf skin. They are often engaged in war with the Bosjesmans, and their most formidable weapon is an iron spear. The men take care of the cattle, and the women cultivate the ground, and manufacture garments of skins. Polygamy is permitted. Their intellectual attainments are extremely limited. They have but a very imperfect idea of the Diety and a future state. The government is in the hands of little chieftains, who pay obedience to a general chief.

Caifa, or Caipha, or Haifa, (an. Ephe, Kephe, Caphe, and Gabe.) s-p. Palestine, situated on S. side the bay of Acre, at the foot of mount Carmel ; 12 SW. Acre. Lon. 35. 10. E. Lat. 32. 44. N. This place was formerly only a miserable village, sprung from the ruins of the ancient city of the same name. At present it is defended towards the sea by walls, built since it fell into the hands of the chief of Acre, who has strengthened it with a citadel, and established a custom house in it. It presents nothing remarkable to the observer, as it contains only a kind of huts thrown together without any order. It is governed by an Arab lord. In the neighbourhood may be seen the remains of the ancient Caifa, called also Porphiry in the time of the Christians.

Cai-fong, or Kai-fong, city, China, and capital of Ho-nan ; 315 SW. Peking. Lon. 114. 28. E. Lat. 34. 53. N. It is situated two leagues from the Hoang-ho ; but the ground around it is so low, that the river is higher than the city. To prevent inundations, strong dikes have been raised, which extend more than 90 miles. This city having been besieged in 1642, by an army of 100,000 rebels, the commander of the troops sent to relieve it, formed the fatal design of drowning the enemy ; the city was overflowed by breaking down the large dike of Hoang-ho ; and the inundation was so violent and sudden, that it destroyed 300,000 inhabitants. It appears by the ruins, which still subsist, that Cai-fong must then have then have been 9 miles in circ. It has been rebuilt since this dismal event, but in a style far inferior to its former magnificence. Nothing at present distinguishes it from ordinary cities but the extent of its jurisdiction, which comprehends 4 cities of the second class, and 30 of the third.

Cairo, or Grand Cairo, or El Kahira, city and metropolis of Egypt, on the east side of the Nile, a few leagues above the commencement of the Delta; 59 miles W. Suez, 85 SSW. Damietta, 100 SE. Alexandria. Lon. 31. 20. E. Lat. 30. 2. N. Pop. usually stated by recent travellers at 300, or 400,000. According to Dr. Pococke, 2,000,000 was the prevailing estimate, which he supposed a great exaggeration. Faraoun states it at 700,000; Browne at 300,000; and Volney at only 250,000.

It is said to have been founded in 973 by Jauhar, a general of Moaz, the first Fatamite caliph. About two centuries after, it was enlarged by Saladin, and surrounded with walls, and it became the capital of Egypt and the centre of its commerce. About the beginning of the 15th century, it was one of the richest and most flourishing cities in the world, the emporium of Egypt, and the common store house of Asiatic and European commerce; and its commerce extended from the straits of Gibraltar to the remotest regions of India.

Cairo is situated about a mile from the Nile, on the canal of Kalisch, which is derived from the river, and traverses the whole city. On the bank of the river, 1 mile west of the city, is the town of Bulac, its principal port. The city extends about 2 miles east and west, and is 8 or 9 miles in circuit. The streets are extremely narrow, crooked, dirty, and without pavements; the widest, which traverses the whole city, would be considered only a lane in Europe. The houses of the poor are built of mud or unburnt bricks, and are of only one story; those of the better sort are of soft stone, of 2, sometimes of 3 stories, having all flat roofs with terraces of stone or tiles. All the houses have the air of prisons, having no light from the street, as it is extremely dangerous to have many windows in such a country; and the entering door is very low. The interior of the houses of the principal inhabitants exhibits the conveniences suited to the climate, combined with some degree of elegance. Cairo is said to contain 720 mosques, 36 synagogues, 12 Coptic churches, 2 Greek churches, and 70 baths. The architectural ornament has been chiefly bestowed upon the mosques and the tombs of the mamelukes. Several of the mosques are magnificent. All of them being adorned with minarets of the lightest and most ornamented architecture, agreeably interrupt the uniformity of the flat-roofed houses, and are so numerous as to appear at a distance like the masts of ships in a crowded harbour.

The castle or citadel is a noble object. It is situated on a rock of considerable elevation, and is about a mile in circuit, but the greater part of it is ruinous. One of the objects, which has most attracted the attention of travellers in the castle, is that wonderful specimen of ancient art, called Joseph's Well. It is sunk through solid, though soft rock to the depth of 276 feet. At the mouth it is an oblong square, 24 feet by 18, which dimensions continue to the depth of 146 feet; afterwards it is 15 feet by 9, to the depth of 130 feet. A stair case of gentle descent, cut in the rock, winds round the well, with a partition of about 2 feet in thickness, left between it and the pit, with a few small windows, which give a scanty light. For 150 feet the descent is easy; afterwards difficult. At the western end of the castle are remains of very magnificent apartments. The grand saloon, called Joseph's Hall, is adorned with large and beautiful pillars of red granite. Above it is a terrace commanding a view exceedingly magnificent. You here survey the whole of Grand Cairo, with all its gardens, fountains, squares, palaces, mosques, and minarets, stretched at your feet, the ruinous town of Bulac, the populous town of Fostat, the grand aqueduct, the majestic stream of the Nile, the verdant islands, the village of Gizeh, and, though at least 12 miles distant, those eternal monuments of human skill and folly—the Pyramids.

The commerce of Cairo, though diminished within the last 3 centuries, is still very extensive. Through it the various productions of Asia and the East Indies, and partly also those of Europe, are transmitted into the vast regions of the interior of Africa. The communication with the interior of Africa is chiefly maintained by 3 caravans, which go to Sennaar, to Darfur, and to Mourzouk; from which places, and particularly the last, it is extended to Nigritia and other regions in the interior. The returns are made in gold, ivory, senna, gums, hides, ostrich feathers, and above all, slaves. Every year a grand caravan is formed by the union of caravans from Abyssinia, western and northern Africa, and Egypt, laden with the merchandise of Africa. These meet at the Birket, or lake of the Pilgrims, 10 miles from Cairo, and being joined by numerous pilgrims, proceed to Mecca. After 100 days this great caravan, sometimes consisting of 100,000 souls, returns, bringing the choicest productions of the east.

The Arabs constitute the body of the population. The other races are Copts, Albanians, Turks, Jews, Syrians, Armenians, Greek and Catholic Christians; also Persians, Indians, Abyssinians, western Africans; and in the slave-market are to be seen specimens of almost all the native tribes of the continent.

Cairoan, or Cairwan, supposed to be the Vicus Augusti of the Itinerary, t. Africa, in the country of Tunis, and second only to that city for trade and number of inhabitants; 60 S. Tunis, 180 ESE. Constantina. Lon. 9. 57. E. Lat. 35. 36. N. It is situated in a barren, sandy desert, where are found many vestiges of former magnificence. At half a furlong from the city, there is a capacious pond and cistern built for the reception of rain water; but the pond, which is the chief provision for their cattle and ordinary uses, as the other is for their own drinking, being dried up, or else beginning to putrefy about the middle of the summer season, it frequently occasions agues, fevers, and various other distempers. There are at Cairoan several fragments of ancient architecture; and the great mosque, which is accounted to be the most magnificent, as well as the most sacred in Barbary, is supported by an almost incredible number of granite pillars.

Calcutta, city, Bengal, capital of all the British possessions in Hindoostan, on E. bank of the Hoogly, or Bhagirutti river, the west branch of the Ganges, 100 miles from the sea. Lon. 88. 28. E. Lat. 23. 33. N. Pop. according to Lord Valentia about 700,000. The police magistrates estimated the population in 1802, at 600,000; and including the adjacent country with a circuit of 20 miles, at 2,225,000. The number of houses, shops, and other habitations in 1798, in the city, exclusive of the old and new forts, was 78,760; of which 4,300 belonged to British subjects, 640 to Armenians, 2,650 to Portuguese and other Christian inhabitants, 10 to Chinese, 14,700 to Mahometans, and 56,460 to Hindoos. It is the seat of an English bishop, and contains a cathedral, 1 English, 1 Scotch Presbyterian, 1 Portuguese, 1 Greek, and 1 Armenian church, several mosques, and a number of Hindoo temples. It has also a government house, which is a superb palace, a town house, a court house, and a theatre.

Opposite to the town there is good anchorage for vessels of 500 tons, but the larger vessels are obliged to stop at Diamond harbour, 50 miles below. It has excellent advantages of inland navigation by means of the Ganges. There are several docks for building ships, and the commerce is very great, amounting to about £10,000,000 per annum. The houses belonging to the English are built of brick, plastered with chunam, and have a very elegant appearance. Many of them resemble the palaces of monarchs, rather than the houses of merchants. The streets of the black town, belonging to the natives, are narrow and dirty, some of the houses are brick, two stories high, but the most of them are mud cottages of one story, with thatched roofs.

In 1690, at which time Calcutta was only a village, the English first founded a factory here, which they afterwards fortified, and named Fort William. This is now called the Old Fort. In 1758-9, foundations of the new fort were laid about a mile lower down the river, and the name of the former transferred to it. It is an irregular octagon, having barracks for four regiments, and is so extensive as to require, in case of a siege, a garrison of 10, or 15,000 men. Here is a college, instituted by the marquis of Wellesley, with several professors; and about a mile below the fort on the opposite side of the river, is a botanic garden, in which are many curious and valuable plants. In 1816 a college was instituted here by the Hindoos for the instruction of their sons in European learning; and in 1820 a Mission college was established, under the direction of the bishop, with considerable endowments, for the instruction of the natives, in order to prepare them to become preachers and schoolmasters.

Calcutta, with its suburbs, extends along the river about 6 miles, but is of various breadth. Its local situation is not fortunate, having extensive muddy lakes and an immense forest near it. It was formerly esteemed very unhealthy, but has been rendered less so by clearing away the jungle, draining the streets, and filling up the ponds, by which a vast surface of stagnant water has been removed. The city was formerly nearly encompassed by a trench, which is now in most places filled. The environs are occupied by pleasant gardens and country houses; and the surrounding country is very populous.

Caledonia, p-t. Livingston co. N. Y., on W. side of the Genesee; 16 E. Batavia, 20 S. by W. Rochester, 235 W. Albany, W. 378. Pop. 2,645. The village is situated on the great road from Albany to Buffalo, and contains about 50 houses. It is a very excellent agricultural township, and produces wheat in great quantities, and has several beds of gypsum, also limestone, iron ore, salt and sulphur springs. Great or Big Springs, situated on the north side of the village, are regarded as a curiosity. The waters, which are impregnated with sulphur and lime, boil up in great quantities from the earth in a pond or reservoir of 5 acres. In this pond, except at the places where the water boils up, grows a singular weed, 5 or 6 feet high, and so thick as to be almost impenetrable. The surface of the water is covered with a frothy substance which, when dried, has a very offensive smell. The temperature of the water is always nearly the same, extremely cold, but never freezes. A fine mill-stream issues from this pond; and the quantity of water varies little by the wetness or dryness of the season.

Caledonia, ancient name of N. part of Scotland, by some extended to the whole country.

Caledonia, (New,) country, N. A., west of the Rocky mountains; about 500 miles from N. to S., and nearly 400 from E. to W. The country is mountainous; abounds in lakes, the largest of which are Stuart's lake and Natteotain lake. The largest rivers are Fraser's and Natteotain rivers. The thermometer sometimes falls 32 degrees below zero; but the seasons are generally milder than in the same parallel east of the Rocky mountains. The summer never very hot. The natives call themselves Tâ-cullies, by the whites called Carriers; estimated at 5,000.

Caledonia, (New,) large isl. in the S. Pacific ocean, which, Capt. Cook says, lies nearly WNW. and ESE. and is about 261 miles long in that direction; but its breadth is not considerable, not any where exceeding 30 miles. It is a country abounding in mountains and valleys, of various extent both for height and depth. The height of one of the mountains is estimated at upwards of 7,000 feet. From these hills spring vast numbers of rivulets, which greatly contribute to fertilize the plains, and to supply all the wants of the inhabitants. The summits of most of the hills seem to be barren, though some few are clothed with wood, as are all the plains and valleys. Most, if not every part of the coast, is inhabited, the isle of Pines not excepted. Lon. 63. 37. to 167. 14. E. Lat. 19. 37. to 22. 30. S.

Hanover, bounded N. by Luneburg, E. by Luneburg and Hildesheim, S. by Brunswick, and W. by Lippe-Detmold, the Hesse province of Schauenburg, Schauenburg-Lippe, and the province of Hoya. It takes its name from an ancient castle, now in ruins, situated on the Leine, 11 S. Hanover. It is watered by the Weser and Leine. The country is in some parts mountainous, in some marshy, and others sandy, but generally fertile; producing wheat, rye, barley, oats, tobacco, hops, flax, &c. They reckon 12 towns, the principal of which are Hanover, Hameln, and Neustadt. Sq. m. 1,050. Pop. 139,222; of whom 1,477 are Jews, 891 Catholics, 380 Calvinists, the remainder Lutherans.

Calicut, or Calicodu, country, and once a considerable empire of Asia, which extended itself throughout all Malabar. Its chief took the title of king of kings. The present prince is a Brahman, and it is the only kingdom in the Indies governed by a Brahman; every where else the Brahmans are only secretaries and ministers. The state, which the Indians call Malleami, is 75 miles long, and from 14 to 18 broad. The air is pure and wholesome; the soil fertile, but subject to inundations, from the amazing rapidity of the waters which pour down from the mountains; and the sea has frequently made such ravages on the coast, as to oblige the Samorin to remove his residence from the town of Calicut to Panana. The Samorin, it is said, was able to raise an army of 100,000 men. This country was ceded to Great Britain in 1792.

Calicut, formerly the capital of the kingdom so called, 76 W. Coimbatore, 95 Seringapitam. Lon. 75. 44. E. Lat. 11. 20. N. In 1800 it contained upwards of 5,000 houses, and about 33,000 inhabitants, and was rapidly improving. The houses are built of wood, or bricks baked in the sun, in the midst of which are beautiful gardens. It is 9 miles in circumference, including a large village, or fauxbourg, inhabited only by fishermen. It is not surrounded by walls; the streets are narrow and dirty, but the trade is considerable, and it is frequented by vessels from Arabia and the Red sea. The principal exports are pepper, teak, sandal wood, cerdamums, coir cordage, and wax.

California, peninsula in the Pacific ocean, united on N. to the continent of N. America, from which the other part is separated by a narrow sea, called the gulf of California, and bounded S. and W. by the Pacific ocean; near 900 miles in length, and in different places 30, 60, 90, and 120 miles wide. A chain of mountains extends through the peninsula, of which the greatest height is from 4,500 to 4,900 feet above the sea. This peninsula is said to have been discovered by sir Francis Drake, and by him called New Albion; and the gulf of California has been sometimes called The Vermilion Sea, or Purple Sea, or Red Sea. In a peninsula of so vast an extent, which reaches nearly from the 23d to the 40th deg. N. Lat. the soil and climate must naturally be found to vary. Some parts are continually covered with flowers, but the greater part is wild, rugged, and barren, overrun with rocks and sand, and destitute of water. From cape St. Lucas to the Colorado, nearly 200 leagues, only two streams run into the gulf of California. Pop. 9,000. The principal places are Santa Maria, St. Ignatio, St. Isidoro, Loreto, St. Estevan, St. Xavier, St. Yago, Rosalio, St. Juan Guadalupe, and St. Joseph.

California, (New), country, N. America, on the coast of the N. Pacific ocean, called by captain Vancouver New Albion, and by captain La Perouse, New California. It lies N. of the peninsula, which is called Old California, and is 600 miles long, and only 30 broad. Square leagues 2,125. Monterey is the capital. There is not any country in the world which more abounds in fish and game of every description; hares, rabbits, and stags, are very common here; seals and otters are also found in prodigious numbers; but to the northward, and during the winter, they kill a very great number of foxes, bears, wolves, and wild cats. The land possesses also great fertility; farinaceous roots and seeds of all kinds abundantly prosper here. The crops of maize, barley, corn, and peas, cannot be equalled but by those of Chili; European cultivators can have no conception of a similar fertility; the medium produce of corn is from 70 to 80 for 1; the extremes 60 and 100. The population in 1802, including Indians who have settled and begun to cultivate fields, was 15,562.

Callao, s-p. Peru, on a river of the same name, near the Pacific ocean; 7 S. Lima, and it is the port of that city. Lon. 77. 4. W. Lat. 12. 3. S. Pop. about 5,000. The road is one of the most beautiful, the largest, and safest in the South sea. Two islands, named St. Laurence and Callao, and the peninsula, which nearly reaches them, defend vessels from S. winds; towards W. and N. it is open, but these winds never blow with violence; the sea is always tranquil; the water is deep and without rocks. Callao is the rendezvous of from 16 to 17,000 tons of shipping, 5,000 of which are reserved for the navigation of the Pacific ocean. The town was fortified by ten bastions and some batteries, and defended by a garrison. There are two fauxbourgs inhabited by Indians. In 1746, this town was destroyed by an earthquake, when of 4,000 inhabitants only 200 escaped. Since that time, Collao has been rebuilt upon the same plan, but a little farther from the sea.

The court house and jail are situated in a small village at Lechmere's point, a mile from Boston, with which there is a connexion by Craigie's bridge, across Charles river. In this village there is a large glass manufactory. One of the Congregational meeting houses and the Baptist and the Universalist meeting houses are in the large village of Cambridge-port, which is connected with Boston, by West Boston bridge, across the same river.

The University in Cambridge, the oldest in the United States, was incorporated in 1638, and named Harvard College, from its principal founder. Its endowments have been since greatly increased by donations from the state, as well as by numerous acts of private bounty; and with regard to funds, library, professorships, and various literary advantages, it is the first institution of the kind in America. It comprises a department for undergraduates, and one for students preparing for each of the learned professions, theology, law, and medicine.

The buildings consist of University Hall, a very elegant edifice of granite, 140 feet by 50, and 42 in height, containing a chapel, 6 lecture rooms, dining halls, &c.; Harvard Hall, a brick edifice, 108 feet by 40, containing the library, philosophical apparatus, and mineralogical cabinet; 4 other brick edifices, called Massachusetts, Hollis, Stoughton, and Holworthy Halls, each 4 stories high, containing rooms for the accommodation of students; Holden Chapel, containing the anatomical museum, chemical laboratory, and lecture rooms; and 3 college houses of wood, occupied by students. The library is the largest in the Union, and contains about 28,000 volumes. The philosophical apparatus is probably not surpassed by any in the country. The chemical laboratory, anatomical museum, and cabinet of minerals are all valuable. The botanic garden comprises 7 acres, laid out in an ornamental style, and is furnished with an interesting collection of trees, shrubs, and plants, both native and foreign.

The legislative government is entrusted to a corporation, consisting of the president and 6 fellows; and to a board of overseers, composed of the president of the university, the governor of the state, lieutenant governor, members of the council and senate, and the speaker of the house of the representatives, ex officiis; together with 30 others, 15 clergymen and 15 laymen, elected for the purpose. The executive government of the university, including the several departments, is composed of the president, 20 professors, and 5 tutors. The course of education requisite in order to obtain the first degree in arts in this university, as in American colleges generally, is completed in four years.

The studies of which a knowledge is necessary in order to admission into the freshman class, are Græca Minora, Greek Testament, Virgil, Sallust, Cicero's Select Orations, elements of ancient and modern geography, arithmetic through alligation medial and alternate, and algebra to the end of simple equations.

In the Theological School, the course of education is completed in 3 years, and the students are divided into 3 classes, Junior, Middle, and Senior. Tuition is afforded free of expense to all; and further assistance is given to such as are indigent. Graduates of any college, of suitable character, may be admitted to share in all the benefits of this institution.

The Law School was established in 1817. Candidates for admission must be graduates of some college, or qualified according to the rules of court to become students at law. Students in this department, after a course of study of 3 years, one half of which, at least, being passed at the university, may obtain a degree of LL. B.

The lectures for the medical students are delivered in Boston, at the Massachusetts Medical College, which is a spacious edifice of brick, and contains a medical library of about 4,000 volumes. They commence annually on the 3d Wednesday in November, and continue 3 months. In order to obtain a degree of M. D., it is necessary for a student to attend 2 courses of lectures, and to pass 3 years, including the time occupied in attending the lectures, under the direction of some regular practitioner.—In 1822, the number of undergraduates was 277; theological students 29; law students 13; medical students 53:—total 374.

Commencement is held on the last Wednesday in August. There are 3 vacations; the 1st from commencement, 4 weeks and 2 days; the 2d, from the 4th Friday in December, 7 weeks; the 3d, from the 3d Friday in May, 2 weeks.

Cambridge, (West,) p-t. Middlesex co. Mass.; 6 NW. Boston, W. 438. Pop. 1,064.

Cambridge, p-t. Washington co. N. Y.; 35 NE. Albany, W. 380. Pop. 2,491. Here is an academy.

Cambridge, p-t. and cap. Dorchester co. Md., on S. side of the Choptank, 18 miles above its entrance into the Chesapeake; 15 NW. Vienna, 55 SSE. Baltimore, 55 ESE. Washington. Lon. 76. 7. W. Lat. 38. 33. N. Pop. 1,300. H. 120. It has a pleasant and healthy situation, and has increased nearly one half within 5 or 6 years. It contains a court house, a jail, and an Episcopal church, all of brick; a Methodist meeting house, a market house, and an academy, incorporated in 1809, and endowed with an annual income of $500, and having usually about 70 pupils.

Cumbridge, p-t. Abbeville district, S. C.; 56 N. Augusta, 70 WNW. Columbia, W. 595. It is pleasantly situated on an elevated plain, 7 miles from the Saluda, and contains a court house, a jail, an academy, and 60 or 70 houses. The district court is held here.—In 1781, this town, then in possession of the British garrison, was besieged by the American troops under Gen. Greene.

Cambridge, p-t. and cap. Guernsey co. Ohio, on Will's creek; 25 E. Zanesville, 45 W. St. Clairsville, W. 303. Pop. 300; including the township, 988. It is a thriving town, and contains the county buildings and about 50 dwelling houses.

Cambridge, co. Eng., bounded NW. by Lincolnshire, N. by Norfolk, E. by Suffolk, S. by Essex and Hertfordshire, and W. by the counties of Bedford, Huntingdon, and Northampton; about 52 miles long, and 26 broad. It is divided into 17 hundreds, and contains 1 city, (Ely,) 1 university, (Cambridge,) 7 other market towns, and 163 parishes. Sq. m. 686. Pop. 101,109. Families 21,022; 12,881 engaged in agriculture; 5,303 in trade and manufactures; 2,888 otherwise. In N. part the lands are low and naturally bogs, but have been, by great labour and expense, drained and converted into rich meadows, or fertile corn land; the air is unhealthy, and the water brackish; and, notwithstanding all the care and pains taken, the lands are still subject to inundations. The SW. part of the county is more elevated, and the air is more pure; the SE. part is open and healthy, and but thinly inhabited.

Cambridge, (an. Garanta and Caergrant,) t. Eng., cap. Cambridgeshire, on the Cam; 17 S. Ely, 51 due N. London. Lat. 52. 13. N. Pop. 11,108. It is situated on both sides of the Cam, but chiefly on the southeast bank. The river is crossed by 9 bridges. The town is about 1 mile long, and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile broad; the streets and buildings irregular. It contains 14 parish chh., 4 meeting houses for dissenters, and a university, for which it is chiefly celebrated. It has no manufacture of consequence; its chief trade consists in oil, corn, and iron. Four members are returned to parliament; 2 by the town, and 2 by the university.

The university of Cambridge is, next to Oxford, the greatest in Europe, for the extent and number of its buildings and institutions, and the wealth of its endowments. It was founded or revived, according to some, by Sigebert in 630. The earliest public instrument, however, conceived to be authentic, does not ascend higher than A. D. 1229; though it is supposed to have subsisted a considerable time before. It now consists of 13 colleges, 4 halls, the schools, a public library of about 100,000 vols., a senate house, and a botanic garden, consisting of 5 acres. Each of the colleges and halls, has apartments for students and fellows, a master's lodge, a chapel, a library, a hall, and a combination room; several of these are magnificent structures.

In the following table are exhibited the names of the several colleges and halls, the years of their foundation, and the number of fellows, scholarships, and members belonging to each in 1802; with the exception of Downing college, which has been founded since that date.

CANADA, country, N. America, belonging to Great Britain. It was first settled by the French in 1608, but was taken from them by the British in 1759, and was confirmed to Great Britain by the treaty of 1763. It was divided in 1791, into the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada.

LOWER CANADA is bounded N. by New Britain, E. by N. Britain and the gulf of St. Lawrence, SE. and S. by New Brunswick, and the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, and SW. and W. by Upper Canada. The Outawas river forms a great part of the boundary between Upper and Lower Canada. Above its source the line runs due N. to Hudson's bay, about Lon. 81. W.—Lon. 62. to 81. W. Lat. 45. to 52. N. Sq. m. about 230,000.

Divisions. It is divided into 4 districts, viz. Montreal, Three Rivers, Quebec, and Gaspé, which were subdivided in 1792, into 21 counties, viz. Bedford, Buckingham, Cornwallis, Devon, Dorchester, Effingham, Gaspé, Hampshire, Hertford, Huntingdon, Kent, Leinster, Montreal, St. Maurice, Northumberland, Orleans, Quebec, Richlieu, Surry, Warwick, and York. The minor divisions are, 1st, signiories, or the original grants of the French government under the feudal system; 2nd, townships, or grants of land made by the English since 1796, in free and common soccage.

Chief towns. The principal towns are Quebec, the capital, Montreal, Three Rivers, New Carlisle, Sorelle, St. John's, Chambly, La Chine, and Tadousac.

Population in 1763, 70,000; in 1775, 90,000; in 1814, 335,000; 275,000 native or French Canadians; the remainder being a mixture of English, Scotch, Irish, and Americans.

Government. The government is modelled on the principles of the British constitution. The executive power is vested in a governor, with a council of 17 members, all appointed by the king of Great Britain. The legislature, or provincial parliament, is composed of a council of 15 members appointed by the king, and a house of assembly of 52 members, elected by the people.

Religion. About nine tenths of the inhabitants are Catholics; the majority of the remainder are Episcopalians. There are 2 bishops residing at Quebec, one Catholic, the other of the church of England. In 1811 there were 140 Catholic clergymen, 15 of the church of England, and 3 Presbyterian.

Education. There are respectable seminaries at Quebec and Montreal, but education is generally much neglected. All the publications printed in Canada, in 1810, were 4 newspapers, an almanac, and the acts of the assembly.

Inhabitants. The descendants of the ancient Canadian colonists retain the politeness, sprightliness, and easy manners of the old French, from whom they sprung. Their houses are built of stone, and plastered, seldom, except in the towns, of more than one story, and made extremely warm by means of stoves. Their furniture is generally of their own workmanship, and very simple. Their principal article of food is peas soup, with a small quantity of pork boiled in it, and a dish of thick sour milk. The women and children seldom make use of any other drink than milk and water, but the men are passionately fond of rum. During the 6 months of winter a great portion of the time is devoted to amusements, of which the most prevalent is dancing.

Climate. The climate is healthy, but the extremes of heat and cold are very great; the thermometer sometimes rising in summer to 100°, and sinking in winter to 40 below 0.

Rivers. The great river of St. Lawrence forms a striking feature of Canada. The other principal rivers are the Uttawas or Outawas, Sorelle, St. Francis, Chaudiere, Saguenay, St. Maurice, Black, Bustard, Betsiamites, Harricanaw, and Rupert.

Lakes. The principal lakes are St. John's,

St. Peter's, Abbitibbe, Mistassin, and Manicouagan.

Face of the country and soil. Lower Canada is intersected by ridges of mountains, which generally extend from the coast into the interior, with intervening valleys of a fertile and pleasant appearance. The valley through which the St. Lawrence flows is enclosed on each side by mountains. It is mostly level, of a very rich soil, and is thickly settled. The country lying upwards of 50 miles north of the St. Lawrence, has been but little explored, and is only known to be covered with immense forests.

Productions. The productions are grass, wheat, rye, Indian corn, barley, and culinary vegetables.

Commerce. The commerce has been progressively increasing since the country came into the possession of Great Britain. The exports in 1769, amounted to only £163,000; in 1808, to £1,156,000. The exports consist chiefly of lumber, firs, grain, and pot and pearl ashes; the imports of wines, rum, sugar, molasses, coffee, tobacco, salt, coals, and British manufactures, amounting in 1808 to £610,000.

UPPER CANADA is bounded E. and SE. by Lower Canada, S. by the United States, from which it is separated by the St. Lawrence and the chain of the great lakes. New Britain lies on the north and west, but the limits are not well defined, the regions on these borders being unsettled. Lon. 74. to about 98. W. Lat. 42. to about 50. N.

Divisions. It is divided into 8 districts, viz. Eastern, Johnstown, Midland, Newcastle, Horne, Niagara, London, and Western. These are subdivided into 23 counties, viz. Glengary, Stormont, Dundas, Prescott, Russell, Grenville, Leeds, Carleton, Frontenac, Lenox, Adington, Hastings, Prince Edward, Northumberland, York, Durham, Norfolk, Oxford, Middlesex, Lincoln, Haldimand, Kent, and Essex. These contain 159 townships, exclusive of Indian lands, and certain other large portions, that are reserved for the crown and the maintenance of the Protestant clergy. The townships contain on an average about 61,600 acres each; total 9,694,400 acres; of these about 3,000,000 acres are granted in free and common soccage, 2,769,828 reserved for the crown and clergy, and 3,924,572 still remain to be granted.

Face of the country and soil. The country, which is thus laid out and surveyed, extends about 570 miles along the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, lakes Ontario and Erie, up to lake St. Clair, varying from 40 to 50 miles in breadth. The soil consists generally of a fine dark loam, mixed with a rich vegetable mould. The whole country presents a great degree of sameness, an almost uniform level, rising only a few feet above the banks of the St. Lawrence, and finely intersected in every direction by numerous streams, some of which are navigable. The productions are grass, wheat, Indian corn, flax, hops, &c. The climate is healthy, and considerably milder than in Lower Canada. Further north the country is covered with immense forests, but is but little known, except to the Indians.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the St. Lawrence, Outawas, Niagara, Trent, Ouse, Redstone, and Thames.

Lakes. One half of the lakes Ontario, Erie, St. Clair, Huron, Superior, and Lake of the Woods, is included in Upper Canada. There are besides lakes Nipissing, Simcoe, St. Joseph's, &c.

Chief towns. The principal towns are York, the capital, Kingston, Newark, Queenstown, and Chippeway.

Population. The population is rapidly increasing; in 1783 it was estimated at only 10,000; in 1814, at 95,000. It consists chiefly of emigrants from the United States and Great Britain.

Religion. The Methodists are the most numerous denomination. There are also Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Quakers, and Mennonists.

Government. The executive power is vested in a lieutenant governor and a council of 6 members, all appointed by the king. The legislative power is vested in a council of not less than 7 members, appointed by the king, and a house of assembly of 23 members, returned from the counties.

CANALS, English. The first canal in England, was made by the duke of Bridgewater in 1756. Since that time canals have become very numerous, opening an internal communication between most of the great towns for the conveyance of their manufactures, and also for the transport of agricultural produce to the seaports. They are distinguished by being of moderate width, generally straight, passing through hills by tunnels, and over valleys or rivers by aqueducts, and few if any are without locks. Some of the principal are the Ashly de la Zouch Canal, 50 miles long; the Basingstoke 37; the Coventry and Oxford; the Chesterfield 45; the Ellesmere, 57; the Grand Junction canal, branching off from the Thames at Brentford, 100; the Grand Trunk, opening with the Severn, 135; the Hereford 35; the Ghennet and Avon 57; the Lancaster 76; the Liverpool and Leeds 130; the Oxford 91; the Leicester and Northampton 43; the Thames and Severn 30; the Wilts and Berks 52; the Warwick and Birmingham 25; the Worcester and Birmingham 31½ miles long. There are also many others.

Scotland. The Caladonian canal opens a communication between Murray frith and the Atlantic; distance 49 miles, of which 3 navigable lakes, Loch Ness, Loch Oich, and Loch Lochy occupy 37; leaving 22 miles of land. The Forth and Clyde canal, 35 miles long, intersects the island.

Ireland. The Royal canal and the Grand canal, both form a communication between Dublin and the Shannon; and a branch from the Grand canal is carried to the Barrow; thus connecting Dublin with Waterford.

Canal of Kiel, Holstein, connects the Baltic with the Eyder, and thus forms a communication with the German ocean; 22½ miles long.

Canal of Briare, in France, was begun by Henry IV. to form a communication between the Seine and the Loire, from the town of Briare; at Montargis it is joined by the canal of Orleans, and in one stream falls into the Seine at Fontainebleau.

Canal of Languedoc, France, made during the reign of Louis XIV., extending from Cette on the Mediterranean to the navigable water of the Garonne, near Toulouse, 140 miles. There are various others in France.

In Netherlands the canals are very numerous; a chain of them unites Ghent, Bruges, Ostend, Nieuport, Furnes, &c.

In Sweden the most important canal is that which unites the North sea, at Gottenburg, with the Baltic at Stockholm.

In Russia a chain of canals and rivers forms a communication between Petersburg and Astrachan, 1,100 miles.

China is celebrated for its canals, of which the principal one, called the Imperial canal, extends from Pekin to the Kiang-Ku, about 600 miles.

Canals, (United States.) Middlesex canal connects the Merrimack with Boston harbour; 28 miles long. The New York Grand canal, now making, is to connect lake Erie at Buffalo with the Hudson at Albany, 253 miles long. The Northern canal connects lake Champlain with the Hudson, 23 miles long. A canal connects Elizabeth river, Virginia, with the Pasquotank, 22 miles long. There are besides various other canals.

Canaries, cluster of islands in the Atlantic, generally considered as belonging to Africa, the most easterly being about 150 miles from cape Non. They are 13 in number, 7 of which are considerable, viz. Palma, Ferro, Gomera, Teneriffe, Grand Canary, Fuerteventura, and Lancerota; the other 6 are very small, Graciosa, Roca or Rocca, Allegranza, Sta. Clara, Inferno, and Lobos. They are supposed to have been known to the ancients under the title of the Fortunate Islands.—The extent and population of the seven largest, according to Ledru, are given in the following table.

	Sq. leagues.	Pop.	Pop. to sq. l.
Teneriffe.....	73.....	70,000.....	958
Fuerteventura	63.....	9,000.....	142
Grand Canary	60.....	50,000.....	833
Palma.....	27.....	22,600.....	837
Lancerota.....	26.....	10,000.....	384
Gomera	14.....	7,400.....	528
Ferro.....	7.....	5,000.....	714
	270	174,000	644

Hassel states the population of the whole at 181,000, and the square miles at 3,213.

The soil of these islands is very fertile, and produces all kinds of grain, fruits, and pulse in great abundance; but the method of cultivation practised by the natives tends very little to its improvement. All the islands furnish excellent wine, but the preference is given to the wines of Palma and Teneriffe. The situation of the Canaries, the salubrity of their climate, the fertility of the soil, and the quality of their productions, all conspire to render them the most valuable of the spanish colonies.

The present inhabitants of these islands are descended from a mixture of the Spanish conquerors and the aborigines, on whom the government of that period conferred equal privileges. They are strong and well made, but more swarthy than the natives of Spain.—The gentry, though few of them are rich, are rather proud, but polite and hospitable; some of them are tolerably well educated and informed. The Canarians are blind to the impositions of their priests and lawyers. They are rigid Catholics; and it is impossible for a person of any other persuasion to live among them. The bishop resides in Grand Canary, and has an annual income of about £6,000 sterling. In each island is an office of the inquisition. Lon. 13. 20. to 18. 10. W. Lat. 27. 30. to 29. 30. N.

Canary, (Grand), the most fertile and important of the Canaries, which gives name to the whole, about 30 miles long, and 18 broad. The middle part of the island is very mountainous, so that on one side it may blow a storm, while on the other it is quite calm. The air is temperate; the inhabitants have 2 harvests in a year. The principal town is Palmas, or Canary; other towns are Galder, Tirachana, and Luz. The heavens here are seldom overcast, the sky being almost continually serene, and free from storms and thunder. The air is exceedingly wholesome, and the natives enjoy health and longevity, almost beyond any people in the world. This island is well watered, and abounds with wood of various kinds; almost every thing that is planted here will thrive. Lon. 15. 30. W. Lat. 28. N.

Candahar, or Kandahar, pr. Cabulistan, between Lon. 64. and 68. E. Lat. 31. and 34. N. It is an elevated, though level country, watered by the Heermund and Argandab; very destitute of wood and all kinds of fuel; but in many parts very fertile, producing all kinds of grain, fine melons, grapes, &c., and feeds numerous flocks of sheep, and herds of cattle, camels, &c. It has but few towns, the inhabitants consist mostly of migratory tribes, and pay little attention to agriculture. It has been alternately subject to Persia and Hindoostan.

Candahar, (an. Alexandria), city, Asia, capital of the province of the same name. Lon. 65. 30. E. Lat. 33. N.; 176 WSW. Cabul. Population estimated at upwards of 100,000. It is situated on the Heermund, about 3 miles in circumference, of a square form, and is populous and flourishing, and has long been a distinguished mart for trade. It is surrounded with walls and ditches, once the frontier town of Hindoostan towards Persia. It is situated in the road from Ispahan to Delhi, and consequently is a place of considerable trade and importance. The environs are said to be well cultivated, having fine gardens and orchards, abounding in delicious melons and grapes.

Candi, or Candy, (an. Maagrammum), city, Ceylon, and capital of a country, to which it gives name; 80 miles from Columbo. Lon. 80. 44. E. Lat. 7. 36. N. The town is a poor, miserable place, surrounded by a mud wall. It is about 1 mile long, consisting of one principal street and many smaller ones. It is situated in the midst of lofty and steep hills, covered with thick jungle. The palace is built of a sort of chunam or cement, perfectly white, with stone gateways. The air is reckoned wholesome, and the climate good. The kingdom is divided into several provinces, some of which are populous and fertile, intersected with rivers, and well furnished with woods.—This kingdom was annexed to the British dominions in 1816.

Candia, or Candy, or Kirid, or Kriti, large island in the Mediterranean, about 170 miles in length, and from 15 to 30 broad, belonging to the Turks. Lon. 25. E. Lat. 35. 18. N. Pop. estimated at 280,000. Turks 150,000; Greeks 130,000; Jews 200. According to Olivier only 240,000. Sq. m. 4,176. It was well known to the ancients under the name of Crete, a rich and powerful kingdom, with 100 cities; from thence called Hecatompolis. St. Paul planted Christianity in this island, and Titus was the first bishop. It is traversed by rocky mountains, the most remarkable of which is the lofty Psilorite, the Ida of the ancients. It enjoys a most delightful climate, has a very fertile soil, and with proper cultivation, would produce, in profusion, the necessities and luxuries of life. The country abounds in oil, corn, and fruit-trees; on the hills grow vines, which yield excellent wine. Other articles of commerce produced in the island are wool, silk, honey, wax, raisins, saffron, and carob bread. The principal manufacture is soap. It is divided into 3 pachalics; the chief towns of which are Candia, the capital of the whole island, Canea, and Retimo.

Candia, city and s-p. on N. coast of the island of Candia, of which it is the capital. Lon. 25. 18. E. Lat. 35. 19. N. Pop. 12, or 15,000. Abp. see. It is supposed by some to be on the site of ancient Heraclea, and by others on that of Panormus. It is situated in a plain country, on E. side of a large bay, and is of a semi-circular figure, very strongly fortified, and is about 4 miles in circumference. It has about 14 mosques, 6 or 7 of which were churches, 2 Greek churches, 1 Armenian, and 1 synagogue. The town is ill built, and the harbour is so filled up with sand that it cannot admit more than 10 merchant vessels. Here are the largest soap works in the island.—The town is noted for its 24 years' siege by the Turks, from 1645 to 1669.

It is situated on N. coast, in a bay about 15 miles wide, between Cape Maleca and Cape Spada. It has been generally thought to be built on the spot of the ancient Cydonia. The city is of an oblong figure, about two miles in compass, fortified towards the land after the modern way by the Venetians, with 4 bastions and a ravelin at the NE. corner. On N. side of the town is the port, well defended by a wall; there is a light house at the end of it, and a castle in the middle, which serves as a cistern. It is a neat town, the buildings being almost all Venetian. Most of the mosques are old churches; of which, together with the chapels, there were 25.

Canton, or Quang-tcheou, city & s-p. China, Vol. I.

capital of Quang-tong, on the river Pe-kiang or Canton; 1020 S. Pekin. Lon. 13. 3. E. Lat. 23. 19. N. Pop. uncertain and very differently estimated. Some estimate it at from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000; Lecomte at 1,500,000; Duhalde at 1,000,000; Hassel reduces it to 300,000; Malte-Brunn and Cannabich to 250,000. It is one of the richest cities of the empire. The immense quantity of money which foreign vessels bring daily to this city, draws hither a continual crowd of merchants from all the provinces; so that one is sure of finding in its warehouses the rarest productions of the soil, and the most valuable of the Chinese manufactures. The city is situated on a beautiful river, which is navigable 300 m. further into the interior, and it has a communication by canals with all the neighbouring provinces; the entrance of it is called Hou-man; its banks, the plains which it waters, and even the hills which hang over it, are cultivated, and afford the most enchanting prospect.

The city is composed, as it were, of three different cities, separated by lofty walls, but so conjoined, that the same gate serves to go out from the one and enter the other. These three cities united, almost form a regular square; the streets are long and straight, paved chiefly with cut stone, and ornamented from space to space with triumphal arches, and are kept exceedingly clean; some of them are covered; these contain the richest shops. The houses present nothing remarkable but great neatness; they are built of brick and consist only of one story, and have no windows to the street. People of condition are carried here in chairs. The streets are continually crowded, especially with porters, who are all loaded, and have for the most part their heads, legs, and feet bare. There is no other convenience in this city for transporting goods from one place to another, than men's shoulders.

About a league from Canton is the Boat Town, which consists of about 40,000 barks of all sizes, which cover the river night and day, and form a kind of floating city: they all touch one another, and are ranged so as to form streets. The people who inhabit them, (differently estimated from 100, to 300,000,) have no other dwelling, and are prohibited by law from settling on shore. Each bark lodges a family and their grand children.

Canton is the only emporium of European commerce in China, and it is said there are often 5,000 trading vessels lying before the city. The principal exports are tea, to the extent of 30, or 40,000,000 of pounds yearly, porcelain, nankeens, silks; mother of pearl, gold in bars, sugar, tutenague, and many other articles. The management of trade is vested in a council called hong, consisting of 12 or 14 members, generally men of great wealth.—The country around the city is pleasant and healthy, abounding in all the necessaries and delicacies of life. The Church Missionary Society have had a missionary here since 1807, who has translated and circulated the New Testament in Chinese.

Cape François, or Le Cap, called, during Christophe's reign, Cape Henry, t. St. Domingo, on the north coast. Lon. 72. 16. W. Lat. 19. 46. N. It was founded in 1670; burnt in 1792, by the blacks; was the last town retained by the French in the island, but was surrendered by them to the blacks, in 1803; it then became the capital of the black emperor, Henry Christophe. Before it suffered so severely by intestine convulsions, it contained a number of elegant buildings, about 900 houses of stone and brick, and a population of from 8, to 12,000; some say 20,000; 12,000 being slaves. It is situated in a very fertile tract, and has one of the most secure and convenient harbours in the island. It is built on a cape at the edge of a large plain, 60 miles long, and 12 broad, between the sea and the mountains. Its situation is not fortunate, as it is screened from the land wind by the mountains, and thus left exposed to the unmitigated fervour of the sun's rays. The plain is well watered and highly cultivated. It is cut through by straight roads, 40 feet broad, lined with hedges of lime and lemon trees, leading to plantations, which produce as great a quantity of sugar, as any spot of the same size in the world.

The first object that strikes the eye is a rock 200 feet high, about 50 paces from the sea, all crystallized in large stones of the size of a man's leg, with 4 or 5 plates chased one within another, of a cinereous colour, from 8 to 14 inches long, with a large grain that will take a good polish. In the centre of this promontory there are 4 hills near to each other, called the Sacristan, the Two Friars, the Captain, and the White Mountain. The other side of the promontory, beyond these 4 hills, is called El Puerto de la Plata, where the Moorish corsairs lie lurking for Spanish vessels.

Cape of Good Hope, cape & English settlement in S. extremity of Africa, in the country of the Hottentots. Lon. 17. 36. to 28. 17. E. Lat. 29. 55. to 34. 47. S. It is bounded N. by the river Koussie, and the country of the Bushmen, E. by the Great Fish River, S. and W. by the ocean; 550 miles long, and 230 broad. It is divided into 5 districts, viz. the Cape, Stellenbosch, Drakenstein, Zwellendam, and Graaf Reynet. Pop. 61,947; of whom about 22,000 are whites, the rest negroes and Hottentots. The chief town is Cape Town. The leading feature in the aspect of the country, consists of 3 successive ranges of mountains, running parallel to each other, and to the southern shore of Africa. The first range is called Large Kloof, or Long Pass; the 2d, considerably higher, Zwarte Berg, or Black mountains; the 3d, still higher, at a distance from Zwarte Berg, of 80 or 100 miles, is called Nieuwveldt mountain, and is supposed to be 10,000 feet high. The plain between the mountains and the sea, is very fertile and well watered, and there are other tracts very productive. But a large proportion of the territory is barren. The climate is generally temperate, but subject to be deluged with rain in the cold season, while in the hot months scarcely a shower falls to refresh the earth, and the dry winds become very pernicious. The productions are wheat, barley, rye, peas, beans, and particularly brandy and wine, which are the staple productions. The country farther inland is much infested with beasts of prey, such as lions, tigers, leopards, wolves, &c. Game is plentiful, and the number of antelopes and deer prodigious. Among other species of animals are the elephant, elk, rhinoceros, giraffa, &c. A great number of beautiful and rare birds have been found, as well as curious plants, by naturalists, who have made it their business to visit the country for that purpose.—In 1806, it was taken from the Dutch by the British.—Lon. of the cape, 18. 24. E. Lat. 33. 55. S.

Cape Town, capital of the Cape of Good Hope. Lon. 18. 23. E. Lat. 34. 29. S. Pop. in 1818, 18,173; of whom 7,460 were whites; 1,905 free blacks; 810 apprentices; 536 Hottentots; 7,462 slaves. It is agreeably situated, rather above 30 miles from the Cape of Good Hope, properly so called, at the head of Table bay, in a valley, between the Table and Lion mountains. It is defended by a castle of considerable strength, and contains a court-house, a guard-house, a Calvinistic church, a Lutheran church, a theatre, and 1,145 houses; many of which are magnificent. The tone of society is wholly commercial, the minds of all classes being bent on trade. There is not a public school, nor a bookseller's shop in the town. The streets are broad, but ill-paved. Provisions are very reasonable. The town is well supplied with springs of excellent water, sufficient also for the ships which call at the port. The harbour is tolerably secure from September to May, while the SE. winds prevail; during the rest of the year, when the wind blows generally from the N. and NW., ships are obliged to resort to False bay, on the opposite side of the peninsula.—A missionary is supported here by the London Missionary society.

Cape Verde Islands, islands of Africa, in the Atlantic, so called from Cape Verde opposite to which they are situated; 390 W. Cape Verde, and between 15 and 18 degrees N. Lat. As to their number, some reckon 10, others 14 or more, by giving the name of islands to those which are only rocks. They are in general mountainous; the lower hills are covered with a beautiful verdure, as well as the extensive valleys between; but with little water, except what is found in ponds and wells. They are said to have been, and probably were known to the ancients, under the name of Gorgades.

The air is extremely hot and unwholesome; it rarely rains, and the ground is so hot that one can hardly stand in places exposed to the sun. It is dangerous to pass the night in the open air, for the great heat is often succeeded by a sudden cold, which proves mortal to such as are exposed to it. The soil is for the most part stony and barren, nevertheless some parts produce rice, maize, bananas, lemons, oranges, citrons, pomegranates, figs, and melons; grapes are gathered twice a year. The manufacture of leather and salt form the principal riches. Two of them, St. Yago and St. Philip, depend immediately on the king, and are the only ones that are fortified. The number of inhabitants is calculated at 100,000. Few whites are now seen; the influence of the climate has changed the ancient Portuguese to negroes. The governor and priests are often negroes. The chief town is Porto Praya.

Capua, city, Naples, cap. Lavora, on the Volturno ; 15 N. Naples. Lon. 14. 8. E. Lat. 41. 5. N. Pop. 7,831. Abp. see. It contains, besides the cathedral, one collegiate, 16 parish churches, and 12 convents. Modern Capua is not on the same spot where formerly the ancient Capua, so renowned in history, stood, but about 2 miles from it, and was partly built out of its ruins.

No city, in Italy, Rome excepted, contains a greater number of ancient inscriptions, which were no doubt brought hither from Old Capua. This city is situated in a very pleasant and fruitful country on the left shore of the Volturno, and about 12 miles from the sea. Its fortifications are pretty good, consisting of bastions, ravelins, and other works, all covered with free-stone. The river, as well as its castle, contributes very much to its strength. Ancient Capua stood pretty near mount Tifata eastward; and its great wealth and power gave umbrage to the Romans.

CARACCAS, country, in the northern part of S. America, having the Caribbean north, and New-Grenada west; watered by the Orinoco and its branches. It was once called Eastern Terra Firma, but was styled by the Spaniards the Captain-generalship of Caraccas, from 1786 to 1810; containing the following provinces:

Provinces	Pop.	Chief towns.
Venezuela,.....	500,000	...Caraccas.
Varinas,.....		...Varinas.
Maracaybo,.....	100,000	Maraybo.
Cumana,.....	80,000	Cumana.
Spanish Guiana.....	34,000	St. Thomas.
Margarita island,.....	14,000	Ascension.

Total 728,000

The population here stated is the estimate of Depons. The whites are computed at 2-10ths, the slaves at 3, the descendants of freemen at 4; the remainder Indians. In 1810, the inhabitants made a declaration of independence, and assumed the name of the Republic of Venezuela. It has since been united with New-Grenada, under the name of the Republic of Colombia. See Colombia and Venezuela.

Caraccas, or Leon de Caraccas, city, S. A., capital of the Caraccas. Lon. 67. 5. W. Lat. 10. 31. N. Abp. see. Pop. according to Humboldt, in 1800, 40,000; in 1812, 50,000. On the 26th of March 1812, the city was partly destroyed by an earthquake, and nearly 12,000 persons were buried in the ruins. By the political events, which followed this catastrophe, the population of this ill-fated city was reduced in 4 or 5 years after the earthquake, to less than 20,000. The city is some leagues from the sea, from which it is separated by mountains, and is elevated about 3,000 feet above the ocean. It carries on a considerable trade. It contains a university, a theatre, 9 churches, 4 hospitals, 3 monasteries, and 2 nunneries. Its port, named Guayra, has bad anchorage, but by the construction of a mole, the road is good.

Cardona, t. Spain, in Catalonia, on the Cardenero; 10 S. Solsona, 36 NW. Barcelona. Lon. 1. 31. E. Lat. 41. 55. N. Pop. 2,400. It is situated at the foot of a rock of salt, which, on the side of the river, appears cut perpendicularly, forming a mass of solid salt between 4 and 500 feet high, without the least crevice, fissure, or strata; nor is any gypsum to be found in the neighbourhood. This rock is about 3 miles in circumference, and about the same height as the adjacent mountains, but its depth being unknown, it cannot be ascertained on what basis it rests. This prodigious mountain of salt, divested of any other substance, is unparalleled in Europe. Several figures, candlesticks, caskets, and other toys, are cut out of this salt as transparent as crystal. This mountain has a considerable surface, yet the rain does not diminish the salt. The river which runs at its foot is briny, and when it rains the saltiness of the water increases, and kills the fish; but this effect does not extend above 9 miles.

The greatest part stands upon a small rocky island, which rises gently in a bay of the Baltic; the suburbs extend over another small rock, and along the mole close to the basin, where the fleet is moored. It is adorned with one or two handsome churches, and a few tolerable houses of brick, but the generality of the buildings are of wood. The suburbs are fortified towards the land by a stone wall. The entrance into the harbour, which by nature is extremely difficult, from a number of shoals and rocky islands, is still further secured from the attack of an enemy's fleet, by 2 strong forts, built on 2 islands, under the batteries of which all vessels must pass. The harbour is large and commodious, with depth of water sufficient for ships of the first rate. The exports are timber, tar, potash, tallow, and marble. Carlsrona is the principal depot of the Swedish navy.

15,100. H. 940. It was founded in 1715 by the margrave Charles William, and is now the residence of the grand duke of Baden, who has a fine palace and delightful gardens. The plan of the town is regular, but very singular, being in the form of a fan; the palace being taken as the centre, the streets proceed at equal distances, in the form of radii. The number of streets in the original plan was 32; of which only 9 have been built, all close to each other. The remaining 23 are lined with poplars, which add much to the beauty of the town. The houses are constructed with as much regularity as the streets, being almost all of stone, and of equal size and height. The town is surrounded by a forest, and the view from the top of the palace is extremely beautiful.

The palace is surrounded by a botanic garden, and contains a library of 70,000 volumes, a philosophical apparatus, a cabinet of minerals and medals, and a cabinet of natural history. The town contains 5 churches, a lyceum with 17 teachers, an institution for the deaf and dumb, and other seminaries. The chief support of the town is derived from the court and some petty manufactures, adapted to fashionable company.

Carniola, (Duchy of) country, Austria, bounded N. by Stiria and Carinthia, E. by Dalmatia and Croatia, S. by Istria and the Adriatic, and W. by Goritz, Friuli, and the Adriatic. It measures, in its greatest extent, 120 miles from E. to W. and 100 from N. to S. It is for the most part mountainous; some of the mountains are covered with wood, others are naked, and many of them have their tops continually covered with snow. There are, however, many fruitful valleys and fields, which yield not only good pasturage, but excellent corn, hemp, flax, and millet. The country contains mines of iron, quicksilver, cinnabar, lead, alum, marble, &c. The manufactures are woollens, linens, and lace. The common people are of Scalvonic origin, but the nobility are for the most part Germans. The two principal languages are the Scalvonic and the German. Most of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics.

The duchy of Carniola was divided into Upper Carniola, of which Laybach is the capital; Lower Carniola, the principal town of which is Gurckfeld, or Kersko; Middle Carniola, the capital of which is Gottschee; Inner Carniola, of which Duin, or Tybein, is the chief town; and Austrian Istria, including the county of Mitterberg, the signiory of Castua, the territory of Idria, the territory of Tulmino, the county of Goritz, the county of Gradisca, and the territory of Aculega. The principal rivers are the Save, Laybach, Gurk, and Culpa.—Carniola now forms a part of the Austrian government of Laybach, in Illyria, and is divided into the 3 following circles:

Towns. There are no large towns in this state. Raleigh is the seat of government. The other most considerable towns are Newbern, Fayetteville, Wilmington, Edenton, Washington, Hillsborough, Halifax, Tarborough, Salisbury, and Salem.

Education. There is a college at Chapel Hill, and academies are established at Raleigh, Warrenton, Fayetteville, Newbern, Salem, Salisbury, Pittsborough, Louisburg, Oxford, Williamsborough, Murfreesborough, Wilmington, Tarborough, Hillsborough, Greenville, Greensborough, Shoccoe Springs, in Halifax co., and in some other places. An increasing attention is now paid to education in this state.

Government. The legislative power is vested in a senate and house of commons, both chosen annually. One senator and two members of the house of commons are sent from each county; and one of the latter from each of the towns of Newbern, Wilmington, Edenton, Fayetteville, Halifax, Salisbury, and Hillsborough. The governor is chosen by joint ballot of both houses, and is eligible 3 years in 6.

Religion. The principal denominations of Christians in N. C., are Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Quakers, Moravians, and Episcopalians.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Roanoke, Chowan, Neuse, Pamlico or Tar, Cape Fear, and Yadkin.

Face of the country. N. C., in its whole width, for about 60 miles from the sea, is generally a dead level, varied only by occasional openings, in the immense forest with which it is covered. After traversing this tedious plain we are at length relieved by the appearance of hills and mountains; from the summits of which we behold a beautiful country stretching west far beyond the range of vision, and adorned with forests of lofty trees.

Soil & productions. In the level parts, the soil generally is but indifferent. On the banks of some of the rivers, however, and particularly the Roanoke, it is remarkably fertile; and in other parts of this champaign country, glades of rich swamp, and ridges of oak-land, of a black and fruitful soil, form an exception to its general sterility. The sea coasts, the sounds, inlets, and lower parts of rivers, have invariably a soft muddy bottom. That part of the state which lies west of the mountains is for the most part remarkably fertile, and abounds with oak trees of various kinds, walnut, elm, linn, and cherry trees; the last of which grows there to such a size that many of them are 3 feet in diameter. The soil and productions, in the hilly country, are nearly the same as in the northern states. Wheat, rye, barley, oats, and flax, are the crops most generally cultivated, and seem to suit well the nature of the soil. Throughout the whole state Indian corn and pulse of all kinds are abundant. Cotton is raised in considerable quantities.

Of the plains in the low country, the large natural growth is almost universally pitch pine, a tall and beautiful tree, which, grows here to a size far superior to the pitch pine of the northern states. This valuable tree affords pitch, tar, turpentine, and various kinds of lumber, which, together constitute about one half of the exports of N. C. It is of two kinds, the common and the long leaved. The latter differs from other pines, not in shape, but in the length of its leaves, which are nearly half a yard long, and hang in large clusters. The trees in the low countries both of N. and S. Carolina, are loaded with quantities of a long, spongy moss, which, hanging in clusters from the limbs, give the forests a singular appearance. The mistletoe frequently engrafts itself upon the trees in the back country. In this part plums, grapes, blackberries, and strawberries grow spontaneously; also several valuable medicinal plants, as ginseng, Virginia snake root, Seneca snake root, and some others. The rich bottoms are overgrown with canes, the leaves of which continue green through the winter, and afford good pasture for cattle.

Agriculture. North-Carolina is far removed from that perfection of culture which is necessary to give it the full advantage of the natural richness of its soil and the value of its productions. One great cause of its backwardness, in agricultural improvement, is the want of inland navigation and of good harbours. It has several large rivers, but their mouths are blocked up with bars of hard sand. The best of the indifferent harbours in this state are Wilmington, Newbern, and Edenton. The most of the produce of the upper country, consisting of tobacco, wheat, maize, &c. has hitherto been carried to Charleston S. C., and to Lynchburgh, and Petersburg, Va. Since 1815 the state has been zealously engaged in an extensive system of internal improvements. These improvements relate to the navigation of the sound, inlets, and the rivers Roanoke, Tar, Neuse, Cape Fear, Yadkin, Catawba, &c.; the construction of canals, and roads, and the draining of marshes and swamps.

Climate. Like all the southern states, N. C. has a considerable diversity of climate, occasioned by the physical peculiarities of its different parts. In the level part of the country intermittent fevers are frequent during the summer and autumn. During these sickly seasons the countenances of the inhabitants have a pale yellowish hue, occasioned by the prevalence of bilious affections. Many fall victims during the winter to pleurisies and peripneumonies. In the western and hilly parts, the air is as pure and salubrious as in any part of America, and the inhabitants live to a great age. The heat of the summer's day is succeeded in the evening by a grateful and refreshing coolness. Autumn is temperate and serene, and in some years the winters are so mild, that autumn may be said to continue till spring. Wheat harvest commences in the beginning of June, and that of Indian corn early in September.

CAROLINA, (SOUTH,) one of the U. S. bounded N. by North Carolina, E. by the Atlantic, SW. & W. by Georgia. Lon. 78. 24. to 83. 30. W. Lat. 32. to 35. 8. Towns. Columbia is the seat of government. Charleston is the largest town. The other most considerable towns are Georgetown, Beaufort, and Camden.

Education. There is a college at Columbia, which is liberally supported. Colleges have also been incorporated at Beaufort, Winnsborough, and Cambridge; but they have not taken a higher rank than academies. There are also academies at Camden, Orangeburgh, Pineville, Columbia, and some other places. There is a considerable and increasing attention paid to education. Free schools are established throughout the state, and $30,000 annually appropriated by the legislature to their support.

Government. The legislature consists of a senate and house of representatives. The senate consists of 43 members, chosen every 4 years by districts. The representatives are chosen every 2 years. The governor and lieutenant governor are chosen biennially, by a joint ballot of both houses.

Religion. The principal denominations of Christians in S. C. are Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Baptists, and Methodists.

Manners and customs. The distinguishing virtues of the Carolinians are hospitality to strangers, and charity to the indigent and distressed. The planters, who in general have large incomes, live in a luxurious and splendid style, devoting much of their time to the pursuit of pleasure, and possessing much of that pride and dignity of spirit, which characterize an independent country gentleman. The virtues of the farmers of the upper country are less brilliant, but more substantial. They have fewer vices, are of more frugal and industrious habits, and exhibit greater fortitude in the reverses of fortune. Labour in the lower country is performed almost entirely by slaves.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Waccamaw, Pedee, Black River, Santee, Cooper, Ashley, Stono, Edisto, Asheppo, Cambahee, Coosaw, Broad, and Savannah.

Face of the country. South Carolina is divided by nature into two parts, which, from their physical situation, have been called Upper and Lower Carolina. The latter is supposed to have once been under the dominion of the ocean. Towards the coast the country is a level plain, extending more than 100 miles westward from the sea. Here the eye finds no relief from the dull uniformity of boundless forests, swamps, and level fields. This fatiguing plain is succeeded by a curious range of little sand hills, resembling the waves of an agitated sea. This singular country occupies an extent of about 60 miles. It is extremely barren, enlivened here and there by spots of verdure, or by some straggling pines; and its few inhabitants earn a scanty subsistence by the cultivation of corn and sweet potatoes. After passing these sand hills, we come next to a remarkable tract of ground, called the Ridge, which, on its approach from the sea, is lofty and bold, but on the northwest is level from its summit. This is a fine belt of land, extending from the Savannah to Broad river, fertile, well cultivated, and watered by considerable streams. The country beyond this ridge resembles, in its scenery, the most interesting of the northern states. The traveller is gratified by the pleasant alternation of hill and dale; the lively verdure of the hills is contrasted with the deeper tints of the extensive forests, which decorate their sides; and in the valleys broad rivers roll their streams through the varied beauties of luxuriant and cultivated fields. From these delightful regions the ground still continues to rise, till we reach the western limit of the state. Here 7 or 8 mountains run in regular direction, the most distinguished of which is Table Mountain; other mountains are Oolenoy, Oconee, Paris's, Glassey, Hogback, and King's. These are all in the districts of Pendleton, Greenville, Spartanburg, and York.

Soil. The soil of S. C. is divided into six classes; 1. Tide swamp. 2. Inland swamp. 3. High river swamp, or low grounds, distinguished by the name of second low grounds. 4. Salt marsh. 5. Oak and hickory high land. 6. Pine barren. The first two classes are peculiarly adapted to the culture of rice and hemp; the third is most favourable to the growth of hemp, corn, and indigo. The salt marsh has been much neglected. The oak and hickory land is remarkably fertile, and well adapted to the culture of corn, as well as indigo and cotton. The pine barren, though the least productive, is so much more salubrious than the other soils in the low country, that a proportion of pine barren is an appendage indispensably necessary to every swamp plantation.

Productions. The staple commodities of this state are cotton and rice, of which great quantities are annually exported. These articles have so engrossed the attention of the planters, that the culture of wheat, barley, oats, and other crops equally useful, but less profitable, has been almost wholly neglected. So little wheat is raised throughout the state that considerable quantities are annually imported. Cotton was not raised in any considerable quantities till as late as 1795. Before that period indigo was, next to rice, the most important article of produce; but it is now neglected. Tobacco thrives well. The exports, in 1816, amounted to 10,849,409 dollars. The fruits which flourish best are pears, pomegranates, and water melons; the latter in particular, grow to an enormous size, and are superior perhaps to any in the world. Other fruits are figs, apricots, nectarines, apples, peaches, olives, almonds, and oranges.

Climate. The period of vegetation comprehends, in favourable years, from 7 to 8 months, commencing in January or February, and terminating in October or November. The frosts generally in the months of Nov., Dec., Jan., and Feb., are too severe for the delicate productions of more southern latitudes. The low country is seldom covered with snow; but the mountains near the western boundary, are often mantled in that wintry robe. Frost sometimes binds up the earth, but seldom penetrates deeper than two inches, or lasts longer than 3 or 4 days. At some seasons, and particularly in February, the weather is very variable. The temperature has been known to vary 46 degrees in one day. In Charleston for 7 years the thermometer was not known to rise above 93 degrees, or to fall below 17 above 0. The number of extreme hot days in Charleston is seldom more than 30 in a year; and there are about as many sultry nights, in which the heat and closeness of the air are such as to prevent the enjoyment of sound sleep.

The low country is infested with all the diseases which spring from a warm, moist, and unelastic atmosphere. Of these the most frequent are fevers, from which the inhabitants suffer more than from any, or perhaps from all other diseases together. The districts of the upper country enjoy as salubrious a climate as any part of the United States.

Carolina, (La.) t. Spain, and chief of a new settlement in the Morena mountains; 20 NE. Andujar, 28 N. Jaen. Pop. 2,050. It stands on a fine hill that towers over the whole settlement, and indeed over most parts of the provinces of Grenada and Cordova. The whole town is new from the foundations; the streets are wide, and drawn in straight lines, but the ground is not sufficiently levelled. The houses are upon an uniform plan, without the least decoration.

Carron, v. Scot., in Stirlingshire, situated on a river of the same name; 2 N. Falkirk, 26 NW. Edinburgh. Iron works were erected here in 1760, now become, probably, the largest in Europe. Iron is not only extracted from the ore, but cast into every variety of form. There are about 20 furnaces, and the quantity of iron annually smelted is stated at 6,500 tons; about 2,000 people are constantly employed, and 200 tons of coal consumed every week. All kinds of iron goods are manufactured here; heavy ordnance, cylinders, steam engines, pumps, boilers, and all kinds of ponderous apparatus used in war or the arts. The carronade, a kind of short ship-gun, derives its name from having been first made here.

Carthage, ancient and celebrated city, Africa

Proper, once the rival of Rome, and the emporium of Northern Africa; 10 NE. Tunis. Lon. 10. 40. E. Lat. 36. 40. N. Pop. during the Punic wars, estimated at 700,000. It consisted of 3 parts; Byrsa, or the citadel; Megara; and the Cothon, or port.—There are no triumphal arches or architectural ruins visible at a distance, but there are to be seen foundations of houses, cisterns, caverns, pieces of marble, and broken columns. Among the ruins, the most remarkable is the great reservoir for containing the water conveyed into the city, and which consists of 20 contiguous cisterns, each 100 feet in length, and 30 in breadth. The most splendid monument connected with Carthage is the great cistern, by which water was conveyed from the mountain of Zowan, a distance of 50 or 60 miles. The port bears the name of El Mersa.

Carthage, see Cartago.

Carthagena, (an. Carthago-nova), s-p. Spain, in Murcia; 25 SSE. Murcia, 115 SSW. Valencia. Lon. 1. 0. W. Lat. 37. 36. N. Pop. 25, or 29,000. Bp. see. It is situated at the bottom of a small bay in the Mediterranean. It is defended by a fort, and has the best harbour in the Mediterranean, if not in Europe. It consists of a natural basin of great depth, reaching close to the town, and secured from every wind by surrounding hills, and by an island at its entrance. This bay abounds in mackerel, so much that a small island at the entrance of the harbour is from thence called Scombraria. The neighbouring country produces great quantities of rushes, called Sparta, from whence the town itself received the name of Spartaria, and the country that of Spartarius Campus. Diamonds, rubies, amethysts, and other precious stones, are found here. It was a long time the Indies of the Romans, and there are still silver mines in the environs.

Carthagena, pr. S. America, in New Grenada, bounded N. by the Caribbean sea, E. by the river St. Martha, S. by a part of Terra Firma, and W. by the sea and the gulf of Darien. The country is composed of mountains and valleys, covered with large and small forests. The variety of plants and trees, as well as fruits, is wonderful; the earth is covered with perpetual verdure. Wheat and other grain of Europe, do not flourish well, but Indian corn and rice are raised sufficient for the consumption of the inhabitants. The climate is very hot; from May to December there is almost a continual succession of rain and tempest. Nothing can surpass the variety and beauty of the birds; poultry, pigeons, partridges, and geese are good and plentiful. The fruits peculiar to the country are pine-apples, papayas, plantains, &c. The principal town is Carthagena. Pop. in 1770, 59,233 whites, 13,993 Indians, and 7,770 slaves. Pop. in 1816, stated at 210,000.

Carthagena, city, & s-p. S. America, capital of the province of the same name. Lon. 77. 30. W. Lat. 10. 25. N. Pop. stated from 16, to 25,000. Bp. see. It contains a handsome cathedral, several churches, convents, and monasteries. The streets are straight, and well paved; the houses are chiefly of stone, and of one story above the ground floor, with balconies in front. The city is situated on a sandy island, which forms a narrow passage on the SW. The bay is one of the best in the country. It extends 7 miles from N. to S., and has a safe anchorage, though the many shallows at the entrance make a careful steerage necessary.—Carthagera, together with its suburbs, is equal to a city of the third rank in Europe. It is well peopled, though most of its inhabitants are descended from the Indian tribes.

The climate is very hot. From May to November, which is the winter here, there is almost a continual succession of thunder, rain, and tempests; so that the streets have the appearance of rivers, and the country of an ocean; from this otherwise shocking inconvenience the inhabitants save water in reservoirs, as the wells only supply them with a thick brackish sort, not fit to drink.

Lat. 36. 11. N. Pop. according to Beauchamp, 12,000 ; Olivier, 20, or 25,000 ; Gardanne, 60,000. It was once 6 miles in circumference, and contained 12,000 houses, but from the civil wars of the country, it was so reduced, that Mr. Hanway counted no more than 1,000. The beautiful palaces are in ruins, the walls are destroyed, and it has neither forts nor garrison to defend it. Nadir Shah built a new palace here, adjoining to the old one ; the wall of which was a mile and a half in circumference, thick and lofty, with only one entrance, which is an arched gate ; within are 4 large squares, with trees, fountains, &c. The city is square, about a mile each way, and surrounded with a wall. It is greatly incommoded by the want of good water. Its gardens produce the finest grapes in Persia. It is supposed by some to be on the site of ancient Ecbatana.

Cashmere, or Cachemire, or Kashmir, country, Asia, for a long period belonging to Hindoostan, latterly an appendage to Cabulistan, but now claims independence ; about 90 miles long, of an oval form ; 40 or 50 miles, where widest, broad ; chiefly between Lon. 73. & 76.
E. Lat. 34. & 35. N. The natives have a tradition, that in ancient times it was an immense lake, or basin, and that one of their deities cut through the range of mountains on the southwest, and allowed the waters to run off. It is now a fertile valley, surrounded on all sides by mountains, whence descend numerous rivulets.
It is watered by the Chelum, Little Sind, Kiskengonga, and other rivers. The country is entered by 7 passes. The climate is delightful, and the country beautiful, and styled by the Moguls, the terrestrial paradise of India. Rice is the principal food of the inhabitants. Great quantities of saffron are exported to Hindoostan and other countries ; but its greatest source of wealth is shawls. The inhabitants are Hindoos. They are ingenious and lively, of an olive complexion ; and the women handsome.

Cashmire, Sirinagur, or Serinaghur, (an. Caspira,) city, Asia, capital of the country of Cashmere. Lon. 73. 43. E. Lat. 34. 20. N.
Pop. estimated from 150, to 200,000. It extends 3 miles on each side of the river Chelum, over which there are 5 wooden bridges ; its breadth is nearly 2 miles. It is without walls or fortifications, but has a small citadel, where the governor resides. The streets are narrow and dirty ; the houses mostly of wood, many of them of 3 stories ; with sloping roofs, covered with fine earth, which in summer is sown with flowers, exhibiting a lively appearance. There are no public buildings of importance, but in the environs are remains of several palaces, built by the emperors of Hindoostan. Its greatest ornament is a beautiful lake, called the Dall, which extends from the NE. quarter of the city, in an oval circuit of 5 or 6 miles. On the east side of the lake is a mosque, dedicated to Solomon the son of David.

The chief manufacture is that of delicate and unrivalled shawls, in which 16,000 looms are said to be employed. The shawls are made of the wool or hair of a kind of goat, found only in Thibet. Three people are employed at one loom, and they manufacture in a year only 1 shawl, if a very fine one, or 6 or 8 common ones.

of Cashna consists of land of great fertility, interspersed with arid wastes. The country is generally level, and is said to contain 1,000 towns and villages ; the emperor is called the Sultan of all Soudan, i. e. Negroland. The principal articles of traffic are sena, gold dust, slaves, cotton cloths, goat skins, ox and buffalo hides, and civet. Cashna has no salt lakes or mines, but is supplied with salt from Bornou.

Caspian, or Beautiful, small lake in Greensboro', Vt. It is a head water of the Lamoile.

Caspian Sea, large lake, or inland sea, Asia, bounded N. by Russia, E. by Tartary and Persia, S. by Persia, and W. by Persia, Circassia, and Russia; 646 miles in length from N. to S., and from 100 to 265 in breadth; supposed to be the largest lake in the eastern part of the globe. The water is as salt as that of the ocean, of a bitter taste, and of an ochre colour, without ebb or flow. Though in some places it is exceedingly deep, yet it abounds in shallows, so as to prevent the navigation of ships, which draw more than 9 or 10 feet of water. Among the rivers, which flow into it are the Volga, Ural, and Kur. It has no outlet. The fisheries here, which are very valuable, occupy and train many seamen. The coasts are divided among the Russians, Persians, and Tartars. The Caspian sea was by the ancients called the Hyrceanian Sea; the Tartars call it Akdingis, i. e. the White Sea; the Georgians call it the Kurtshensian Sea; and by the Persians it is styled Gursen.

Lat. 51. 18. W. Pop. 19,000. The river Fulda divides it into 2 unequal parts, one of which is called the Old Town, the other the New, which are united by a bridge of 120 paces in length; the former is ill built; the streets are narrow and winding, the houses irregular, old, and for the most part built of wood. The New Town is divided into Upper and Lower, the latter is small, and is as ill built as the Old Town; the Upper New Town, called also the French town, is built with great regularity and elegance. The streets are wide and straight; the houses uniformly built in a good style, with many magnificent palaces and public buildings. There are 7 Reformed chh., 1 Luth., 1 Cath.; a theatre, a magazine of corn and wood, an anatomical theatre, a public library of 80,000 volumes, a museum, the arsenal, foundery, and barracks. The other objects of interest are the pleasure gardens, with the orangery, the public baths, the menagery, and above all the fine castle Weissenstein, about half a mile from the town, with its beautiful fountains and cascades. The great school called Collegium Carolinum, was founded in 1709. There is attached to it a seminary for schoolmasters, and an academy of painting and sculpture. Here are manufactures of porcelain, earthenware, and woollens; but the trade is not great.—Cassel was the capital of Jerome Bonaparte's short-lived kingdom of Westphalia.

The surface is diversified, consisting partly of extensive plains, and partly of ranges of mountains, of which the most remarkable is Sierra de Cuenca. The principal rivers are the Tagus, Guadiana, and Xucart. The climate is temperate, the soil naturally fertile, but the cultivation backward, and the country thinly inhabited. The productions are wheat, barley, hemp, flax, wine, oil, saffron, honey, sheep, cattle, &c. It contains 1 archbishopric, (Toledo,) 1 bishopric, (Cuenca), and formerly had 3 universities, Alcala, Toledo, and Siguenca.

Castile, (Old,) pr. Spain, bounded N. by Asturia and Biscay, E. by Navarre and Aragon, S. by New Castile, and W. by Leon; 220 miles long, and 120, where widest, broad. It contains the following provinces or subdivisions.

Provinces.	Sq. m.	Pop.	Capitals.
Avila.....	2,600.....	118,100.....	Avila
Segovia.....	3,502.....	164,000.....	Segovia
Soria.....	4,118.....	199,000.....	Soria
Burgos.....	7,752.....	470,600.....	Burgos

18,372 951,700

The surface is diversified with mountains, plains, and valleys. The soil is generally fertile, but in some parts stony and unfruitful. The productions are rye, barley, wheat, madder, in some parts, wine, but its chief wealth consists in its pasturage, which feeds hundreds of thousands of sheep and cattle. Its butter is excellent, and its wool, particularly that of Segovia, is much celebrated for its fineness. The country is remarkably bare of trees, as is also much of New Castile. The rivers are the Ebro, Duero, Xalon, Carrion, and Tormes.

Catalonia, (an. Taraconensis,) pr. Spain, bounded N. by France, E. and SE. by the Mediterranean, on the SW. by Valencia, and W. by Aragon; its form is nearly that of a triangle, the base towards the Mediterranean being about 140 miles in length, the side towards France 120, and that towards Aragon 140. The country in general is mountainous, but intersected with fertile valleys, while the mountains themselves are covered with valuable woods and fruit trees. Corn, wine, oil, flax, hemp, legumes, and almost every kind of fruit, are abundant; here are quarries of marble of all colours, of crystal, and alabaster; here are also found topazes, rubies, jaspers, and other precious stones; mines of lead, tin, iron, alum, vitriol, and salt, and formerly of gold and silver. On the coast is a coral fishery. Catalonia is naturally much less fertile than either of the Castiles, but it far surpasses both, and indeed every other province in Spain, in the industry of its inhabitants, as well as the improvements which they have effected in manufactures, agriculture, and commerce. Pop. 858,818. Sq. m. 12,111. It has usually been divided into 15 vigueries, or jurisdictions. The principal towns are Barcelona, Tortosa, Tarragona, Gerona, and Villa Franca de Panades.

Catania, (an. Catana,) city, Sicily, in the valley of Demona, on the borders of the valley of Noto, the see of a bishop, and suffragan of Monreal; 47 SSW. Messina, 85 ESE. Palermo. Lon. 15. 6. E. Lat. 37. 30. N. Pop. variously estimated at from 40, to 80,000. Bp. see. It is situated on a gulf of the Mediterranean, at the foot of Mount Etna. This city has been repeatedly visited by tremendous earthquakes, and was laid in ruins by one, in 1693, when 18,000 people were destroyed; and upon the situation which it occupied, the present city is built; the lava serving at the same time for a foundation, as well as a quarry, from which stone was dug for its construction.—Catania is reviving with great splendour, and has much more the features of a metropolis and royal residence than Palermo; the principal streets are wide, and well paved with lava. Most of the edifices have an air of magnificence, unknown in other parts of the island, and the town has a title to rank among the elegant cities of Europe. Here is a university with 3 faculties, much celebrated in Sicily. The inhabitants have always been noted for their superiority over the other Sicilians in politeness. The Benedictine convent of St. Nicholas is very large; every part has been rebuilt since the earthquake of 1693.

An obelisk of red granite, placed on the back of an antique elephant of touchstone, stands in the centre of the great square, which is formed by the town-hall, seminary, and cathedral. The cathedral, dedicated to St. Agatha, the patroness of the city, has suffered so much by earthquakes, that little of the original structure remains. The other religious edifices are profusely ornamented, but in a bad taste. The harbour, though one of the largest in the island, is not much frequented, but the trade is considerable. The exports are wheat, barley, wines, oil, &c.

Catanzaro, (an. Cantatium,) t. Naples, cap. Calabria Ultra II., the seat of a governor, and a tribunal of justice; 9 NE. Squillace. Lon. 16. 54. E. Lat. 38. 59. N. Pop. 10,896. Bp. see. Its situation, on an eminence, in a pass between the mountains and the sea, was well adapted for repelling those who landed from Africa or Sicily. In 1593, it became the capital of the province. The chief trade is in corn, silk, and oil.

Celebes, isl. in the E. Indian sea, of an irregular shape, about 500 miles long, and about 200 broad ; called by the natives and Malays, Negree Oran Buggess, and sometimes Tanna Macassar. Sq. m. about 90,000. It is divided into 6 states or kingdoms, viz. Goa, Bony, Wajoo, Sopin, Selindrin, and Mandar. Goa extends a considerable way along the W. and S., and contains, besides Macassar, 2 Dutch forts, Bontyn and Bulu Cumbo. The government is monarchical, and the king is called Karuang, and sometimes Rajah Goa.—Bony, or Pony, is E. of Goa, entirely under the influence of the Dutch, and is governed by a prince, called Pajong, who is elected for life by 7 Orancayos, or nobles.—Wajoo, or Warjoo, or Tuadjoo, is situated N. of Bony, and is governed by a prince elected for life by the Orancayos.—Sopin is situated in the centre of the island, towards the eastern side, to the E. of Bon.—Selindrin is of small consideration, and is NW. of Sopin.—Mandar lies on W. and NW. coast. The inhabitants are Mahometans.

The heat of this island would be excessive if it were not moderated by the abundant rains. The trees are always green, fruit and flowers in all seasons, jasmines, roses, carnations and other beautiful flowers, grow without culture ; orange trees and citrons, shade the plains, with mangoes, bananas, and other fruits ; cotton trees cover the extensive plains. It produces no spice except pepper ; the inhabitants raise a great number of cattle ; the oxen are larger than those of Europe. In the forests are large herds of deer, wild hogs, and a great variety of monkeys, large and ferocious ; some with tails, and some without ; some walking upon four legs, others upon two.—The principal articles which the Dutch obtain from this island, are rice, gold, ivory, deals, and sandal wood ; cotton, camphor, ginger, long pepper, and pearls. The Dutch are said to have had 370 towns and villages under their control. Their principal settlement is at Macassar. Lon. 118. 40. to 124. 15. E. Lat. 2. 0. N. to 5. 40. S.
